For Better or for Worse, A Serb and Croat Wed

Sarajevo Couple Decide That Life Goes On With or Without Peace

By John Pomfret

SARAJEVO, Bosnia and Herzegovina On a day when the governments of the United States, the leading West European countries and Russia presented a peace plan that Swio and Marina Banic. a Croat and a Serb, defied the odds and got married.

It was a typical Sarajevo wedding—cobbled together with the ingenuity that has defined this city's siege.

The bride's flowing white gown came from Zagreb. So did the groom's shocking purple suit. The beer made it over on a newly opened road from Slovenia, and the rice was tossed from a neckage of the rice was tossed from a package of humanitarian aid. The cognac? Snmg-gled over the hills from the Serbs.

Even the day, Wednesday, was packed for wartime reasons — part of a local tradition of avoiding weekends, when during Sarajevo's hardest times, the hills would crawl with Serb "weekend warnors," tossing back shots of plum brandy while they pounded the city with artillery and trank orms.

"What can we do? We have to live, right?" said Silvio, a tall, striking soldier who serves in an anti-tank unit with the mostly Muslim Bosnian Army. "The peace plan is silly. It has nothing to do with my life."

Is President Really Ready To Agree to Invade Haiti?

By Elaine Sciolino New York Times Service

WASHINGTON -- As American commandos rehearse for war and administration officials insist that the crisis in Haiti must end soon, an manswered question is whether President Bill Clinton himself is really willing to risk U.S. lives to restore democracy to Haiti.

His aides insist that despite intensified military planning for an invasion and in-creased war talk, Mr. Clinton has not yet decided what to do.

The administration's public actions and statements offer little help in deciphering Mr. Clinton's intentions. The White House

The president's special envoy on Haiti, William H. Gray 3d, said Wednesday that Washington did not expect the Haitian military to be in power six months from now. But the administration has delivered no such formal ultimatum to the military junta, ordering them to leave or risk an invasion by a certain date, despite the request by the U.S. ambassador to Haiti, William Swing, that he be given the authority to do so, officials say.

The administration has debated, but failed to agree on, authorizing a covert program by the Central Intelligence Agency to sow dissension among the military or finance the departure of the country's three top military leaders, the officials add.

Moreover, there is no consensus among Mr. Clinton's national security advisers on how much longer the United States should give the stringent economic sanctions to work before it moves to an invasion.

The deputy secretary of state, Strobe Talbott, for example, argued strongly in recent interagency meetings that American credibility was at stake and that there had to be a change in government by the end of the year at the latest, even if it took an invasion, officials said. The Pentagon re-mains strongly opposed to an invasion.

Part of the problem in the administration's decision-making is that the tension between Mr. Clinton's desire to do what he political reality; another part of the prob-lem is that the administration has imposed punitive measures on the military only in stages. Mr. Clinton's decision on May 8 to end the practice of forcibly returning Haitians intercepted at sea came after he told aides that he could no longer continue a policy that was "making Haitians choose between being drowned at sea or having their faces cut off on land."

Governments Lose Clout In New Monetary Order

By Carl Gewirtz

PARIS - More than a decade after governments began liberalizing and deregulating financial markets, a new monetary order is taking shape, one that raises the question: Are the governments fast becoming the governed? Friday, as the leaders of the Group of Seven industrial nations open their annual summit meeting in Naples, they will be hard pressed to show that despite the new imperatives of the marketplace they are still in charge. "The privilege of government is being squeezed away," says Richard O'Brien at American Express Bank in London.

Market upsets, such as the year-long weakness in bond prices and the turbulence in the foreign exchange market, are nothing new. What is different is the high degree of contagion — especially between bond markets, which in turn threatens domestic equity markets — and the increasing risk of instability in world financial

No 'Veil of Indifference' But Poles Are Skeptical

Clinton Vows

To Warsaw:

Of Promise of Inclusion In 'Integrated' Europe

By Douglas Jehl
New York Times Service
WARSAW — President Bill Clinton of fered a message of reassurance to this capital in the heart of Central Europe on Thursday with words, gestures and a token gift of aid intended to display his hope that all of Europe might soon be knit with economic and security ties.

But Mr. Clinton's overture, made in private meetings and an eloquent address to the Polish National Assembly, appeared to have gone only a small way toward soothing the uneasiness so prevalent here among Poles fearful that their aspiration to a Western embrace could fall victim to Western fickleness,

In a country whose history has been tortured by betrayal from both West and East, Mr. Clinton insisted that he had no intention of leaving Poland and its neighbors isolated and alone.

He said the United States felt a respon-sibility to include them in a wider Europe "democratic and free, integrated and unit-

It was difficult to say whether that re flected a certain unrealism on the part of the Poles or the new stinginess of an American government unwilling to shower Poland with generous aid and not yet ready to promise to go to war to defend its borders. But it left Mr. Clinton's visit here shadowed by a certain tension.

Even Mr. Clinton, while proclaiming this to be Poland's best opportunity in its 350 years to win peace and security, on Thursday reflected some of the apprehension he had from heard from President Lech Walesa and others in warning that "history and geography caution us not to take this moment for granted."

The president pointed Thursday to the joint military exercises to be staged here two months from now by NATO and Polish forces as a sign that the new Partnership for Peace is truly intended as a means

Simpson Judge Lets in Evidence Of Bloodstains

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — In a setback for the defense, a criminal court judge ruled Thursday that the prosecution can use a bloody glove and bloodstains found at O.J. Simpson's house as evidence that he should stand trial for murder.

The judge, Kathleen Kennedy-Powell, said that even though detectives did not have a warrant, they did nothing improper by scaling a wall at Mr. Simpson's residence after noticing a small bloodstain on his car and becoming concerned that lives were in danger.

The policemen went to Mr. Simpson's house after having found the bodies of his former wife, Nicole Brown Simpson, 35, and a friend of hers, Ronald Goldman, 25, outside her home two miles away. Mr. Simpson is accused of killing them both. He has pleaded not guilty.

"The court finds that the detectives were in fact working for a benevolent purpose in light of the brutal attack and that they reasonably believed that a further delay could have resulted in the unnecessary loss of life," Judge Kennedy-Powell said. "And therefore, the court denies the defense motion to suppress."

In addition to the glove, which was found on the grounds of Mr. Simpson's residence and seemed to match one found at the scene of the June 12 killings, the items in the defense motion included bloodstains on his driveway and a blood spot on the driver's door of Mr. Simpson's

U.S. Commandos Trained for Invasion of Haiti

By Michael R. Gordon New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Stepping up preparations for a possible intervention in Haiti to remove its military leaders, U.S. forces have rehearsed a plan to seize airfields and ports there, according to Pentagon officials.

One military expert described the exercise as a "final rehearsal" and said the proficiency demonstrated would remain high for three to six weeks; after that, more training would probably be required.

The exercise, which involved more than a thousand commandos who would most likely serve as a vanguard, took place two weeks ago in the southeastern United States and the Gulf of Mexico, the officials said. A battalion of army Rangers flew from Savannah, Georgia, and "seized" an isolated airfield at Eglin Air Force Base, in Florida, which was intended to represent the airfield at Port-au-Prince, Haiti's capital. Navy commandos operating from ships in the Gulf of Mexico practiced capturing a port.

Army Rangers conducted the same kind of exercises at Eglin just before the United States invaded Panama in December 1989 to overthrow General Manuel Antonio Noriega.

The administration says it is still pursuing economic sanctions in the hope of forcing the military leaders to step down. But officials have warned that they are keeping open the option of using force to restore to power the president, the Reverend Jean-Bertrand Aristide, and stem a flood of Haitians that is overwhelming refugee centers in the Caribbean. Rostenkowski Maps Tactics

WASHINGTON - Defense lawyers for Representative Dan Rostenkowski told a federal judge they will mount a legal attack on his 17-count corruption indictment on constitutional grounds, a maneuver likely to delay the start of his trial until after the November elections.

A former U.S. attorney. Dan K. Webb, who is the chief defense attorney. said he would file legal arguments within 30 days claiming the charges violated Mr. Rostenkowski's protections under the speech and debate clause of the U.S. Constitution, which shields members of Congress from being prosecuted for conduct related to legislative activity.

Although Mr. Webb and a new cocounsel, R. Kenneth Mundy, insisted they want the case resolved expeditiously, Mr. Webb said, "We're not going to be stampeded and see a defendant denied his constitutional rights."

Mr. Mundy, making his first appearance in the case, is one of the capital's best-known lawyers. He helped the former Washington mayor, Marion Barry. defeat the most serious charges against him in his 1990 trial on drug and perjury told prosecutors and defense lawyers "we've got to move forward" to get Mr. Rostenkowski to trial on fraud and embezzlement charges. But authorities said the schedule of legal briefs she established for both sides makes it virtually impossible for Mr. Rostenkowski to be tried before the November elections. when the powerful Illinois Democrat is seeking a 19th consecutive term.

At a court hearing Wednesday, District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson

Judge Johnson gave Mr. Webb until Aug. 5 to file his first challenge to the indictment, after which the government will have until Sept. 2 to respond. Oral arguments are likely to be held during September, the judge said. (LAT)

'92 Campaigns Are Cleared

WASHINGTON - Allegations that President Bill Clinton's and former President George Bush's 1992 campaigns broke federal election laws were among 29 cases that have been thrown out without investigation. The Federal Election Commission closed those cases on Wednesday, saying they involved low priority matters. The increasing complexity of campaign finance law and the record number of people running for public office have forced the office to be more careful in selecting which cases to

A Senator's Freudian Slip

WASHINGTON - Congressional consideration of military spending in the post-Cold War era often involves balancing Pentagon desires with the impact

As Senator Dianne Feinstein, Democrat of California, demonstrated last week, the line between those two can become blurred for lawmakers from states hit hard by miltary cutbacks. During floor discussion on whether to continue building B-2 Stealth bombers against the wishes of the Pentagon -Ms. Feinstein praised the aircraft, saying that it "can deliver a large payroll."

The verbal slip was amended in the next day's Congressional Record to read "payload." California would retain 22,000 high-paying jobs and $2.5 billion in defense contracts if the Senate's vote on July I to build long-range bombers is adopted by the House.

The crowd filled Plaza de Mayo, where throngs had gathered in the 1950s to cheer Juan Peron and his wife, Eva; where military leaders were cheered when Argentina invaded the Falkland Islands in 1982, and where the mothers of Argentine leftists who had disappeared marched in silence every Thursday during Argentina's "dirty war" in the 1980s.

Police in N.Y. Looked the Other Way

New York Times Service NEW YORK — A "wilful blindness" to corruption throughout the ranks of the New York City Police Department has allowed highly orga-nized networks of rogue officers to deal in drugs and prey on black and Hispanic neighborhoods, according to the final report of the commission that investigated the department.

"Scores of officers told as that they believed the department did not want them to report corruption, that such information was often ignored and that their careers would be ruined if they did so," the Mol-len Commission on police corruption said in its report. The panel's report on its twoyear investigation was particularly powerful in its criticisms of sergeants and other commanders of five precincts found to be riddled with corruption. Aden's Fall to North Provokes Fears of Regional Instability

By John Lancaster

Washington Part Service
WASHINGTON — Yemen's two-month civil war appeared to be winding down Thursday, as northern Yemeni troops gained control of the port city of Aden, stronghold of southern forces seeking to secede from the country.

The north's capture of Aden followed intensive artillery duels that cut off water supplies to the city's 400,000 residents and raised fears of a humanitarian catastrophe. In the last several days, however, the south's defenses appear to have collapsed, and northern troops met little resistance as they moved into the city on Thursday, according to wire reports.

Despite its military victory, the north faces a difficult challenge as it seeks to preserve the fragile unity of Yemen, formed four years ago by the merger of conservative North Yemen with Marxist South Yemen, where the country's limited oil wealth is concentrated

Leaders of the secessionist south were reported to have fled Aden by boat to neighboring Oman, where they vowed to continue fighting against north-ern forces controlled from the Yemeni capital of San'a.

That, in turn, has raised fears of a protracted guerrilla war that could spill over into neighboring Saudi Arabia, undermining stability throughout the vital, oil-producing region.

A diplomat familiar with the region said the fall of Aden does not mean the civil war is over. "The war has just begun,"

Sandi Arabia and its Western allies, including the United States, fear that radical governments in Iraq, Iran or Sudan could seek to expand their influence in the region by step-ping in on the side of the north, possibly using Yemen as a base from which to infiltrate its wealthy neighbor.

Saudi Arabia has long had a troubled relationship with the Yemeni president, Ali Abdullah Saleh, who is from the north and supported Iraq during the 1991 Gulf War.

U.S. officials have expressed concern that Saudi Arabia and its Gulf allies may formally recognize South Yemen and possibly provide its forces with arms, prolonging the conflict.

A State Department official who asked not to be identified said Thursday that while reports on the situation in Yemen were sketchy, "it appears the Nuclear-Talks Issue: Can U.S. Overlook Korean Deceit?

By R. Jeffrey Smith

WASHINGTON - U.S. surveillance satellites observed an unusual development in 1992 at the site of North Korea's newest nuclear reactor --- workmen suddenly began demolishing new walls and rerouting recently laid pipes so they could swiftly install electric turbines in a

The construction, on the eve of a visit by international nuclear inspectors, essentially grafted onto the completed structure some powergenerating equipment that U.S. officials say was meant to perpetrate an elaborate but not very successful

By giving the plant the appearance of a reactor meant to generate electricity, the turbines were apparently meant to shore up a longstanding North Korean contention that its nuclear program is exclusively peaceful, despite some obvious signs of substantial weapons work.

The deceptive construction lies at the heart of a key issue for negotiations between North Korea and the United States beginning Friday in Geneva — namely, how legitimate is North Korea's claim that its nuclear program must be maintained to provide electricity?

Washington is convinced that the 200-megawatt reactor is being built solely to produce plutonium, a key ingredient of nuclear arms, U.S. officials note that no effort has been made to connect the reactor to the nation's power grid. Other nuclear facilities also lack any connection to electricity generation.

Nevertheless, senior U.S. officials say they are willing to go along with the lie in hope of striking a deal that would replace the reactor with a less threatening one and case a major U.S. foreign policy headache. In the talks on Friday, they said, Washington is prepared to offer

North Korea a pledge of assistance in obtaining new nuclear technology so Pyongyang can build a reactor more suited to generating electricity than building bombs.

"The attitude is, If that's what they want, that's what we'll give them," a senior U.S. official said of North Korea's demand for assistance in building a more modern, replacement reactor.

In exchange, Washington wants North Kozea to promise that work on the worrisome reactor will be halted and the structure dismantled according to an agreed timetable; the United States also wants dismantling of a separate, 25- megawatt reactor and a laboratory for reprocessing reactor fuel to separate plutonium.
But skeptics in the administration and on Capitol Hill have argued that the prospective deal could pose substantial risks for Washington.

They suggest that North Korea is merely trying to buy time for its nuclear weapons work by tying a final resolution of the nuclear dispute to completion of the replacement reactor in around 10 years.

Senator Phil Gramm, Republican of Texas, is among those raising questions

He maintains that the nuclear capacity of North Korea exists solely for the purpose of making plutonium and has never has been attached to the national power grid. The argument that they will be hampered in electricity production by shutting down the reactor complex is ridiculous," Senator Gramm

The decision to make elimination of the 200-megawatt reactor a focus of the Washington proposal reflects

the conviction of senior officials, particularly at the Defense Department, that cutting off North Korea's capability to make philonium in the luture is more important — and feasi-ble — than finding any plutonium it may have made already.

It was North Korea's refusal to allow an inspection of the smaller. 25- megawatt reactor to assess its previous phytomium production that triggered a crisis last month. That dispute abated only when Washington agreed to new talks while holding possible economic sanctions in abey

["Anybody who is anticipating a prompt outcome to the negotiations will be disappointed," John D. Holum, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, said to reporters on the eve of the talks. He said the discussion will be a "long slog." Reuters reported.]

China's Li Ducks German Protesters

WEIMAR, Germany Prime Minister Li Peng of China snubbed Berlin's mayor at the Brandenburg Gate and cut short a visit to Weimar on Thursday as demonstrators at both sites protested Beijing's human rights record.

The protests were the first serious demonstrations Mr. Li has seen in Germany after three days of meetings with German politicians and businessmen eager to tap China's huge market.

A surprised Berlin mayor, Eberhard Diepgen, was left waiting for Mr. Li's party at the Brandenburg Gate, the symbol of the Cold War that he was due to walk through.

About 200 German and Chinese protesters stood near the gate with banners in both languages proclaiming "Mass Murderer Li Peng," "Butcher of Tiananmen" and "Freedom for Forty years ago a seed was planted that today provides shelter and bears fruit for a world of people.

Japan's Official Development Assistance reaches people in 150 countries around the world.

Back in 1954, Japan started its Official Development Assistance (ODA) after joining the Colombo Plan, for socio-economic development in the Asia-Pacific region. From those early years we've grown up into world's largest aid donor.

Today, as we join the world's other industrialized nations in Naples marking 20 years of Group of Seven economic summits, Japan is proud to be celebrating its own anniversary: 40 years as an Official Development Assistance donor.

World's number one donor nation.

Since 1991, Japan has been the world's largest aid donor. In 1993, we provided 11.26 billion dollars of ODA to over 150 countries around the world. representing one fifth of the world's total ODA. And we will continue to increase the size and scope of our development assistance. Last year, we announced plans to extend our ODA up to $70—75 billion in the five year period by 1997. It is our strong conviction that developmental assistance surely brings a better standard of living to the world's 5.5 billion people:

Japan's ODA comes in four basic forms: grant aid, government loans, technical cooperation, and contributions to international organizations. Our grant aid totaled $1.9 billion in 1993. It includes assistance for basic human needs, such as health and medical care, safe water supplies, and development of farming villages, as well as human resources development and creation of basic socio-economic infrastructures.

Government loans, comprising $3.5 billion of our 1993 ODA, help finance large social and economic infrastructure projects, such as dams and roads. Such loans have made great contributions to rapid growth in many countries by promoting self-help efforts.

Contributions to international organizations comprised $3.2 billion of our aid total in 1993. Japan is a major contributor to the United Nations organizations as well as international financial institutions such as the World Bank People helping people in times of need.

In 40 years of ODA participation, we have dispatched over 16,000 experts and 12,000 volunteers overseas to improve human resources in developing countries. Over the years, 93,000 foreign trainees from developing nations have visited Japan to learn the technical skills they need to improve the living conditions in their home countries. We have also fostered development of human resources in former socialist countries to help form market economies. Our total technical cooperation in 1993 equaled $2.5 billion.

Sometimes Japan's aid can be more direct. When disaster strikes in a developing country, Japan dispatches teams of experts to help with rescue and medical operations there. Japan's ODA also comes in the form of subsidies or Grass-Roots Grants to assist Non-Government-Organizations (NGO) in meeting the various local needs of developing countries.

Self-help and good governance—Japan's ODA philosophy.

You might wonder what motivates Japan to take the lead in so many different areas of international aid. Besides humanitarian concern and environmental conservation, Japan's ODA is based on recognition of interdependency among nations. It also supports the self-help spirit and good governance on the recipient side. Japan's ODA Charter embodies the following four principles:

- Environmental conservation and development should be pursued in tandem.
- (2) ODA should never be used for military purposes. (3) Recipient countries' military expenditures, their development of weapons
- of mass destruction, and arms trade should be closely watched. (4) Full attention should be given to efforts by recipient countries to promote democratization, introduction of market-oriented economies, and secure

Reliable, plentiful and no strings attached.

Our aid generally arrives with no strings attached. Once aid is provided to a recipient country, the procurement of goods and services is open to anybody in most cases. Japan's untied aid rate at 83.8% is remarkably high among major donor nations. In fact, contracts from Japan-aided projects are won by private companies of various origins, not only from industrialized countries but also from developing countries as well. Japanese companies contracted only less than 30% of all the ODA loan financed projects in 1993.

Taking the lead on new issues.

Despite all the good that ODA creates, traditional recipients still need our help. Additional development needs are arising in such regions as Indochina, Central Asia, South Africa and the Middle East. We are determined to help them meet their challenges.

At the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro in 1992, we pledged around ¥900 billion to ¥1 trillion ($7.7 billion at 1992 rate) in environmental assistance to the world over the next five years.

We have been working to improve living conditions, pollution control, conservation of natural environment and disaster prevention. We also promote activities for Women in Development (WID), which helps meet the vital needs of women in developing countries.

If we can make some progress in solving these issues, perhaps we can help more people to experience a more humane life. We believe that prosperity goes hand-in-hand with environmental conservation, economic liberalization, democratization and respect for basic human rights. We are prepared to assume a leadership role to promote these universal values

Inequality on the Rise

Of all the rich democracies, there is only one, the United States, in which inequality of incomes rose sharply in the past decade and the wages of the working poor sank. There have been big gains in income for many Americans, but most of those gains have been concentrated in the richest fifth of the population. These trends raise troubling questions about the direction in which American society is moving.

Comparisons of the rich countries' economies generally emphasize the rapid creation of jobs in America and, in contrast, the much higher unemployment rates in Western Europe, where elaborate social protection makes labor markets less responsive to the market. But there is another and darker side to the comparison, Richard B. Freeman of Harvard University and several colleagues at the National Bureau of Economic Research have been looking into the differences in the condition of labor among these countries and describing these trends.

In the 1980s, technology shifted job opportunities in favor of education and skill. That happened throughout the in-dustrial world. But it resulted in major increases in income inequality only in America and in Margaret Thatcher's Britain. Even in Britain the earnings of the poorest workers increased - but not in America. In most of the other countries, the number of well-educated people rose rapidly. In America the proportion of youngsters finishing high school dropped from the late 1960s to the late 1980s. The number of college graduates, after rising extremely fast in the 1960s, grew much more slowly over the next two decades. The result was a limited supply of educated people in a time of strong demand. American incomes have reflected that.

The drastic decline in union membership in the United States is another factor accounting for greater inequality. But there have been similar declines in other countries - for example, France - where there has been hardly any shift in the balance between rich and poor. In France, the explanation may be fiercely protective social legislation that also pushes up the unemployment rate, now more than 12 percent versus 6 percent in America.

That is the puzzle: to devise ways to prevent the rise of inequality, and to keep the bottom end of the ladder out of absolute poverty, without interfering with the creation of new jobs. While the remedies seem expensive, it is worth considering the costs of the alternative: a country in which the distance between rich and poor grows steadily, with class hostilities and the politics of resentment getting louder. Free markets, including labor markets, do many things marvelously efficiently - but not everything.

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

Confused Haiti Policy

Give them this. This White House team knows how to upstage a presiden-tial trip. When Bill Clinton was in Europe for D-Day observances, all eyes were on North Korea. This week, as he visited Poland, came news that commando units of the U.S. Army and Navy have been practicing a takeover of Haiti's ports and airfields.

It is hard to believe that the Pentagon's willingness to discuss these "secret" maneuvers is not part of a plan to flush Lieutenant General Raoul Cédras and his henchmen out of Haiti. That is a worthy goal, but the timing is amateurish and the underlying message is troubling. Washington and the United Nations have only recently become serious about enforcing meaningful economic sanctions. These need to be given a chance to produce political results. And a new refugee initiative unveiled on Tuesday at least temporarily relieves the political pressure from that direction.

After months of vaciliating from one policy to another, the United States faces the troubling prospect that President Clinton is drifting into using troops in Haiti because he wants to compensate for other policy embarrassments and does not have a better idea. Armed force is a notoriously poor tool for solving political pro-blems. Even if U.S. forces, as expected, were to make quick work of General Cédras and his crew, does Washington really nt responsibility for enforcing law and order in a volatile, revenge-minded land?

Meanwhile, for refugees it is now America if by land, Panama if by sea. Under the Clinton administration's latest refugee policy, the next 10,000 boat people qualifying for asylum will be sent to Panama. Only those who qualify in Haiti will be eligible for resettlement in America.

The new policy promises larger numbers of people safe haven from terror and persecution; but it continues to discriminate against Haitians, denying qualified refugees the right to resettlement in the United States that is enjoyed by politically more popular groups.

The amended policy comes less than two months after the administration ditched the despicable practice it inherited from the Bush administration of escorting would-be refugees back to Haiti with no chance to explain the dangers that spurred their flight. New processing centers were opened in the Caribbean to evaluate refugee claims, about a third of which were found to have merit.

Predictably, that big policy shift en-couraged many more Haitians to take to the seas, hoping to qualify for resettle-ment in the United States. More boats brought more drownings. The increase also threatened to overwhelm the Caribbean facilities and reignited fears in Florida of a large influx of Haitians.

As it amends that policy now to bar qualified boat people from the United States, the administration still offers sanctuary from danger, meeting its minimal moral and legal obligations. Yet if people continue to flee at present rates, the 10,000 slots in Panama could be filled within two weeks.

Meanwhile, the new policy has one big defect. It subjects Haitians to discriminatory treatment because of their race and their lack of the powerful friends who have facilitated resettlement for comparably large groups of other nationalities. Some half a million Cuban refugees, for example, have been resettled in the United States since Fidel Castro came to power. More than 100,000 people have been admitted from the former Soviet Union since 1980 alone. Haitians, in contrast, have long been treated as an unwanted burden, even though many who do get in have achieved economic success. It is only very recently, after the congressional black caucus and Randall Robinson took up their cause, that Washington's policies have begun to bend. The Clinton administration deserves credit for ending summary returns in May. Its new policy maintains that substantial achievement. But the administration has done the right thing in a way that still reeks of discrimination. It thus invites criticism from all sides rather than the credit it could have gained for upholding the American principle of sanctuary for all in desperate need. And now it adds the confusion of a lurch toward military adventure without enough thought about what might come after the victory parades.

Name-Calling in Indonesia

Think of it as progress. When Indonesian Information Minister Harmoko appeared before a parliamentary hearing fter having shut down three popular Indonesian weeklies — Tempo, Editor and DeTik — he was greeted with boos and catcalls. Up close, such treatment of a government minister may not look like progress. But in the context of a multi-ethnic nation caught up in the many conflicts released by development, namecalling is certainly preferable to sticks and stones. And that is a point well worth keeping in mind as Indonesia wrestles with one of the more contentious issues of development: freedom of the press.

We are not insensitive to the dangers in a society like Indonesia, where misinformation and inflammatory articles can easily lead to unrest and even bloodshed. Nor are we blind to the great strides Indonesia has already made; we can think of many Asian regimes where the kind of criticism meted out to Mr. Harmoko would bring a stiff jail term — or worse. National stability is an important concern. But what seems to get publications in trouble in places like Indonesia is not a penchant for gossip and disinformation but a habit for getting too close to the truth. It hardly seems a coincidence that the three publications each carried stories on Indonesia's minister for research and technology, B. J. Habibie, at the center of a controversy over the purchase of 39 ships from the former East German navy.

We cannot speak for the coverage of these weeklies. What we do know is that Mr. Habibie's economic policies are opposed within his own government by many whose intentions presumably are far from undermining Indonesia's stability. We know, too, that such debate over policy is healthy, and that an emerging middle class has much to contribute. Our guess is that the more such issues are hashed out in the nation's press, Parliament and universities, the less they will be played out violently in the nation's streets.

A Riskier East Asia for Lack of a New Security Order

HONG KONG — East Asians like to pretend that so long as they get their economics right, all other problems will pale into insignificance. Yet recent events in the region are a salutary lesson that "econophoria" has it perils. East Asian security is at a major turning point, and not all the signs are positive. The challenge to the old security order of regional security is most evident on the Korean Peninsula. By effectively abandoning the struggle to force North Korea to give up its nuclear capability, and concentrating on preventing the expansion of its nuclear arsenal, President Bill Clinton has in effect decided to tolerate its acquisition of a nuclear capability.

Proclaiming a "breakthrough" while accepting nuclear proliferation is a late 20th century version of Neville Chamberlain's acceptance of "peace in our time." Shortterm calm is bought at the expense of the near certainty of long-term risks from nuclear weapons proliferation.

Damage is done to American credibility, not to mention to South Korea's ability to cajole North Korea into peaceful reunifi-cation on congenial terms. The prospect of a succession crisis in Pyongyang being waged with nuclear weapons must chill the bones of those who live in Northeast Asia. Elsewhere, confidence in economics is By Gerald Segal upset by harsh political realities. Japan's increasingly pathetic attempts to pretend that it has a government have many sources. An important explanation is that Japan's political modernization is catching up with its remarkable economic modernization

Contrary to the fondest wishes of many authoritarian rulers in East Asia who claim that they are culturally indisposed to political liberalism, it seems that there is a link between political and economic reform. Individual Japanese seek greater political pluralism and a greater share of their national wealth. The shakeout in Japanese society will mean further uncertainty about Japan's direction and its foreign policy priorities.

A third source of worry about East Asian security is the evident unwillingness of Southeast Asians to begin serious discussions about regional security. To be sure, there are new forums for such discussions, but the reality behind the facade is a reluctance to face even halfway difficult choices. A meeting of senior ministers this month will not deal with substantive matters or even attempt to reach a consensus about the agenda for regional security. They cannot even agree on how the various Chinese states should be represented.

The cymics may have been right in be-lieving that what passes for multilateral security in East Asia is little more than an excuse for strengthening national security.

The largest source of uncertainty about the region concerns the fate of China. In a major reassessment of Chinese defense spending, the International Institute for Stategic Studies suggests that China now ranks third in the world. But at the same time as China is pouring money into military research and development, its economy and society are growing more fragmented and fragile. The combination of insecurity and potential military clout is dangerous.

they are gradually losing control of their economy as the booming coastal regions flort their authority. They find themselves increasingly forced to import food, and in 1993 China became a net importer of oil. Interdependence with the outside world is beginning to take hold of important aspects of Chinese foreign policy. ency in economic policy. The upshot will be a regular wrangies about trade that will make the most-favored-nation debates seem short and sweet by comparison.

A China so constrained is likely to struggle to change the international system and perhaps compensate for internal fragility with external fractiousness.

As the outside world faces the opportunity to tie China into the international system, Beijing will no doubt seek to take advantage of the disarray in regional security. An East Asia that has no regional order, and that sees a United States increasingly unwilling to bear any military burden that might lead to conflict, will be vulnerable to those prepared to be ruthless.

North Korea is certainly one of the more wily and ruthless states. But the real question must be whether China will hold together and whether the states of the region will make a serious effort to tie it into a web of international security. East Asia has never known an indisenous pattern of international relations that was not dominated by China. The states of maritime East Asia surely have no nostalgia for their region before the Cold War and the coming of European imperialism.

The writer, a senior fellow at the International Institute for Stategic Studies in London, contributed this comment to the Inter-national Herald Tribune. The new details on Chinese defense policy are being presented at a conference held by the IISS and the Chinese Council of Advanced Policy Studies from July 8 to 10 in Hong Kong.

Let's All Start Seeing the Benefits of the Uruguay Round Soon

WASHINGTON — When President Bill Clinton meets this week with the leaders of the world's other advanced industrial nations at the Group of Seven summit in Naples, he will press them to approve the Uruguay Round of GATT by the end of this year. That agreement, the mest far-reaching trade pact in history, is scheduled to take effect next Jan. 1.

The agreement must come into force on time so that the world can enjoy its enormous benefits soon. But the willingness of America's partners to act will be strengthened by America's continued willingness to lead.

The Uruguay Round is far more than a trade agreement. Its approval is a strategic priority for the United States. It is an investment in a more stable and integrated world in which open societies are linked and invigorated by open markets. And it is a bridge from the postwar world of half a century ago to the post-Cold War world that we are forging today.

Last year, President Clinton's personal engagement and the persistent work of U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor helped break global gridlock after seven years of tough negotiations. Now Congress must do its part. Building on the bipartisan support it has gained, the president is seeking congressional approval of the agreement this year.

Because the United States is the world's leading exporter, this agreement is shaped to America's strengths. It opens global markets to an unprecedented extent at a time when American companies and workers have become more competitive. And it extends free-trade principles to services and agriculture for the first time. By lowering trade barriers and opening new markets, the GATT agree-ment will create hundreds of thousands of high-wage, high-skill jobs for Ameri-can workers in the next decade. And by reducing tariffs on imports, it will lower prices for American consumers.

After World War II, the United States led the way in constructing an open world trading system. Those who de-signed the architecture for the postwar world understood that, to avoid another world war, strong security structures had to be reinforced by strong economic structures. They recognized that cooperation would allow economies to grow and people to prosper. That cooperation, un-der a series of GATT-sponsored world trade negotiations, enabled countries to cut tariffs, lower barriers and create jobs.

The architects of the postwar world also understood that nations united by trade would be less divided by conflict that, as Franklin Roosevelt's secretary of state, Cordell Hull, put it, "When goods move, soldiers don't."

In the aftermath of the Cold War, the West has a new opportunity—and a new responsibility—to extend to the East the benefits and the obligations of the same liberal trading and security order that have been pillars of strength for the West-The nations of Eastern Europe have had the courage to defeat communism and the fortitude to carry out difficult economic reform. The best way to help them is to lift the trade barriers that limit their exports and prospects for economic growth.

The GATT agreement will help the reforming economies of Eastern Europe gain greater access to world markets and make them more attractive to Western investment. The prosperity generated by trade will help those nations bring the benefits of freedom home to their cit

By lowering barriers and especially by cutting tariffs, the agreement will bolster developing countries around the world. It will expand export opportunities for the nations of Latin America which have made epic strides toward free markets and freely elected governments in the past decade. And it will help nations in Asia and Africa achieve sustained growth and sustainable development.

By approving the agreement, we promote global economic growth and the stability it fosters. We diminish the possibility that conflicts over trade will pose a threat to peace. We help new market democracies sustain economic reform. We help ensure that the post-Cold War world is not divided into new blocs: not North against South, not nich against poor, not North America against Europe or Asia.

The United States faces a new test of leadership: to build on the achievements of the liberal trading system to reinforce prosperity, stability and democracy around the world. By ratifying the Uru-guay Round this year, the United States not only will generate growth and jobs, but demonstrate once again that it has the foresight and the confidence to lead.

Iceland 50 Years On, Enduring Between Europe and America

REYKJAVIK — Fiftieth anniversaries are in the air these days, as we move from one World War II milestone to another. Recently, the Icelanders marked the 50th anniversary of an event that only indirectly related to it: their independence from Denmark. Little noticed by the outside world, every community in this island nation turned out on June 17 to commemorate what is for these hardy people a holy day. The main event took place at Thingvellir, a spectacular lava formation not far from Reykjavík where the island's first Parliament met in 930. It is, by coincidence, near the place where the island is very slowly being torn in two, as Europe and America drift away from each other. This geological phenomenon symbolizes the dilemma that confronts this nation of 260,000 as it seeks to adjust to the end of the Cold War. First settled by Norwegians who fled from Norway when Harald the Fairhaired united his country by the sword in 872, the Icelanders have over the centuries had a difficult history. After a would permit them to become independent after 25 years. By that time, however, Hitler had swept over Europe. Denmark was occupied and unable to negotiate freely with the Icelanders.

By John C. Ausland period of independence, they fell under the rule of first the Norwesians and then the Danes. the British garrison, they were greeted by considerable popular hostility, even though the government.

Having declared their neutrality, the Icelanders turned down a British offer to defend them. Out of concern that the German navy had a longer reach than it in fact had, a British destroyer on May 10, 1940, sailed into Reykjavik's harbor and disgorged a battalion of troops. Taken by surprise, Prime Minister Hermann Jonasson decided to make the best of things and advised his people to treat the British troops as guests. Not all Icelanders were so easily reconciled. A half-century of tension between part of the population and foreign troops began.

When an ill-prepared U.S. Marine contingent arrived on July 7, 1941, to begin replacing Finally, in 1918, they reached ernment had (reluctantly) invited them. After an extremely difficult winter, they were happy the next year to move over for the U.S. Army, which eventually had 45,000 men on the island.

By VE-Day, the air base that the Americans constructed at Keflavik was playing an important role in air traffic to Germany. Although the Icelanders wanted to be rid of the base, they finally agreed to a limited civilian maintenance force.

As the Cold War got under way, the Icelandic government was ambivalent about its role. When it finally decided to be a founding member of NATO, a riot broke out in the square in front of the Parliament. The police had to use tear gas to quell it.

Learning from this experience, the government changed its ap-proach when it decided to agree to the expansion of the base at Keflavik, following the North Korean attack on South Korea. It made the amouncement when President Visilis Finabogadottir, Padiament was not in session. who is treated by her landsmen as That was in 1951, and the peo a queen. roller coaster ever since. Alhave consistently supported the existence of the base, there has always been enough opposition to it to assure periodic difficult negotiations. During the 1980s, the United States and NATO spent more than $1 billion in Iceland, on new radar installations and aprovements at the base.

With the Cold War over and money harder to get; the Pentagon has recently been reducing its activities.

When the U.S. Air Force tried to pull out its fighter squadron, it ran into a horner's nest, since these aircraft symbolize for most Icelanders the American com-mitment to defend Iceland, As a result, under an agreement reached in January, there are still four fighters here.

For the first time since it was established, the base at Keflavik stimulates little opposition. Even Olafur Ragnar Grimsson, leader of the People's Alliance, which has consistently opposed the base in the past, has made his peace with it, on the grounds that it is now used to support

United Nations operations. If there was any doubt that the Clinton administration is not preoccupied with Iceland, it was made clear when it waited until a few days before the 50th anniversary to inform the Icelanders that it would send John Deutch, deputy secretary of defense. There had been rumous that Vice President Al Gore would appear.

The ceremony at Thingvellir was relaxed. Anyone could come, and about 25,000 did, despite inclement weather. The star was not mean that Iceland's problems are at an end. With most of its foreign exchange coming from the sale of fish, the country is dependent on its fishing fleet. Having gained recognition of its primacy around the island, the fleet has been venturing into more distant waters. This has brought it into conflict with Norwegian claims in the Barents Seal. To the accompaniment of threatening statements by political leaders, the Norwegian Coast Guard recently took to cutting the wires that hold the Icelandic trawiers' fishing nets. Ironically, it used a device the Icelanders developed during their contest with the British in the 1970s.

This was the eleventh of Ice land's cod wars since the 15th. century. Although the Icelandic hosts avoided the subject in their speeches, Norway's King Harald found it necessary during his speech at Thingvellir to express the hope that normal relations.

In the meantime, Icelanders are keeping a close eye on the evolution of the Norwegian attitude toward the European Union If, as seems unlikely, Norwegians decide later in the year in favor of membership. iceland would be plunged into a debate about what it should do. Although a public opinion poll indicates a majority of leelanders want to become ment bers of the European Union, the political leadership is divided on how fast the country should move in this direction.

Settle for Quality Sport on the Field

WESTPORT, Connecticut

The scolds and the disillusioned of modern America are once again lamenting the disappearance of the hero in our disenchanted times. Curiously, although sports troubadours are traditionally the dupes accused of being too quick to romanticize athletes, it is rarely our kind nowadays who carry on about how sports stars are, in the usual overwrought phrase, Letting Us Down.

The fact is, people in sports and people who cover sports are much more understanding of bald reality. Athletes are, for the most part, young men footloose and fancy free, possessing great wealth and little responsibility, who have been bootlicked and pushed ahead in line since they were children and are therefore likely to Let Us Down. Why should we Americans be surprised that our young royalty acts any differently from the spoiled-kid aristocrats at balls in "Madame Bovary," with their 'daily satisfied passions ... in which the muscles are flexed and vanity sated"? Welcome to the major leagues.

But when forced to confront a case like O. J. Simpson's -- or a much more everyday event like the drug-use suspensions of Dwight Gooden and Diego Maradona - nonsports journalists have a very hard time telling celebrities from heroes. For some reason, sport luminaries are draped in a hero's By Frank Deford mantle while other equivalent entertainment figures remain merely stars, without moral expectations. The athletes are built up even more because in our nitpicking society it is so hard for anyone to retain heroic status. Carlyle's prescient observa-tion that "Democracy means despair of finding any heroes to govern you" has merely been confirmed by the ordination of ersatz ballpark heroes. All this is complicated further by that cloying term "role model." More accurately, when it comes to athletes that people fawn over, it should be "role dream." All too often, American children cite some celebrity they would choose to be rather than someone worthy they would prefer to be like. And then we get angry at the designated role dream for not living up to false demands. Athletes can't help it if they are looked up to. It should never shock us that kids are most impressed by sports stars and rock singers. Neither should we be upset when O. J. and Doc and Diego and Jennifer and Darryl and Pete go astray in their private lives. Most often we should take the hint from Muhammad Ah's old tease: "Who knows where I goes / When the door is closed?"

stars misbehave. Who knows? It may even be good for them to see that famous people are not above the law. In that sense, Gooden's 60-day suspension is surely worth scores of canned

public service announcements about Just Saying No. But — and here's the rub we should be far more concerned with the professional behavior of athletes. It is there, on the field or court, that sports stars do have a real effect upon impressionable kids - and a lot of dopey adults too.

It is one thing to be told that so-and-so was caught doing drugs. It is much more devastat ing for fans to actually see their role dreams mugging each other, insulting each other, carrying on brutally and abusively.

Of course, snorting cocaine is intrinsically a worse offense than trash talking. But each ugly action on the field of play — re-peated in the so-called highlights broadcast — carries far greater weight than what falsely appointed heroes may do in the privacy of their own conceit. The woeful search for the peerless may be appropriate, but when it comes to athletes it is enough to hold them to a heroic athletic standard - on the field. where seeing is believing.

A Russian Makes the Case Against NATO Expansion

By Stephen 3. Rosenfeld

WASHINGTON — The critical struggle over whether NATO ought to take in Central Europe -Bill Chinton, in Warsaw this week, was still hedging — unfolds on the premise that Russia objects to having the alliance move east to its very. doorstep. Is this loss of a strategic buffer Russia's reward for abandoning communism and empire? The bel. "In other words, [Russian entry] question arises both from aggrieved Russians and from Americans, in- practically if not formally." cluding policymakers at the highest level, sympathetic to their alarm. Good answers are available, including that, in all due respect, Russia cannot be allowed to call NATO's shots. But the most telling response comes from an unexpected location: Russia itself. Russia has in effect two parties, one looking West and meaning to leave empire behind, the other looking more inward and readier to reassert the old order. Among the Westernizers who see no good reason for Poland, Hungary and the two halves of the former Czechoslovakia not to join NATO, Sergei Blagovolin's voice rings clear.

Mr. Blagovolin is a veteran of the policy wars who runs an institute in Moscow and is high in the Russia's Choice party of Yegor Gaidar. He and the Hudson Institute's William Odom, a retired general and former head of the National Security Agen-cy, explored the issue of NATO's expansion in the international affairs periodical Novoe Vremya, No. 7.

The idea circulates that "the Russians" oppose NATO expansion. But Mr. Odom notes that Boris Yeltsin said in Warsaw and Prague last September that Russia would not object if they joined. Only later, under pressure from a military that had bailed him out in a confrontation with the old Parliament, did the president reverse his stance.

the case for expansion from Russia's ty and steals a card from the conserpoint of view:

NATO has no offensive potential, a condition confirmed by its unanimity rule, the reduction of U.S. forces to the 100,000 level and its turn from nationalists and undercut Mr. Yeltpreparing to repel a Soviet invasion sin. But this reduces a considerto refocusing on regional conflict.

Poland, Hungary, the Czech Republic and Slovakia sit in a "military-political vacuum" and "completely rationally" fear unforeseen developments in Russia and Ukraine, not to forget Germany. They are "more or less compati-ble" with NATO, and ready — a strategic error. It can still be corunlike many other would-be mem- rected. Russia is in no position to bers — and their participation does not threaten Russia. "Generally speaking, I see only one real danger in NATO's expansion — the possibility that reactionary forces in Russia could use this as one more excuse to ignite anti-Western sentiments."

Russia's own entry into the alliance would mean a "gigantic expan-sion" of NATO's sphere, into an "Atlantic-Pacific structure," and many existing NATO members would reis a guaranteed way to end NATO,

Mr. Blagovolin's favored alternative to membership for Russia is a high-level strategic partnership, with the United States and NATO in Europe and with the United States and others in Asia. Such cooperation "would also become an extremely effective means for preventing a new strategic division of Europe on the basis of a 'clash of civilizations,' which Prof. [Samnel] Huntington predicts.... Otherwise a desolate isolation from all developed countries of the world awaits us.

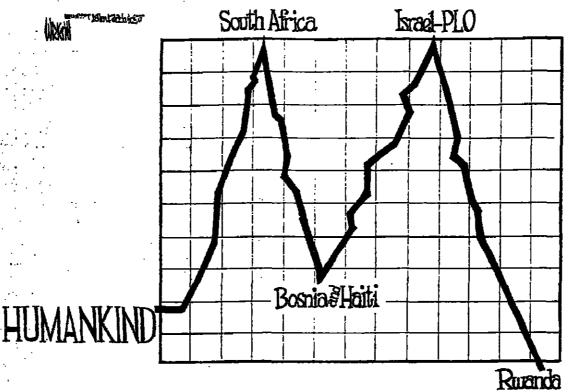

It is so, of course, that one policy wonk's article does not prove that tidal wave of enlightenment is about to sweep over a divided and distracted Russian government. But it can only help to realize that the anti-expansion bluster one hears in Moscow, and the sympathetic echo of it that one hears in Washington, is something less than the whole story: representing not eternal verities but a political debate in the one place and a diplomatic posture in the other. It patronizes Russians to think they cannot bring themselves to un-derstand that NATO expansion does not threaten them, and promises them security advantage and much more. By steadying down a disruption-prone slice of Europe on a sensitive Russian border, expansion gives heart and political space Mr. Blagovolin went on to make to Russia's liberal Westernizing parvative and nationalistic party that is given to tension and adventure.

NATO has held off on expanding so as not to stir up Russian ation of high strategy to an issue of low tactics. Mr. Odom warns that Western hesitation may encourage rather than discourage Russian imperialist tendencies:

"Now it is painfully clear that failing to hedge against the failure of liberal development in Russia is prevent the expansion of NATO today. In a few years it may be."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Devaluation Can Help

Regarding the report "Under Im-posed Devaluation, Africa's Poorest Get Poorer" (June 3):

The writer states that the "clearest result" of the devaluation of the CFA franc is the exacerbation of poverty in the CFA zone. In fact, a well-managed economic reform program offers compelling benefits even to West Africa's poor.

The vast majority of West Africans are rural farmers who stand to gain when the price for their goods increases. At the end of the article, the writer herself points out that the consumption of rice imported from Thailand used to be cheaper than consumption of local foodgrains — a pattern that is now changing under post-devaluation pressure.

In addition, most West African consumers, even urban consumers in Niger, base their diets largely on nontraded, domestically produced items such as coarse grain and root and tuber crops whose prices are not affected by the devaluation.

Urban consumers in coastal countries, such as Senegal and the Ivory Coast, are much more dependent on imported rice to be sure, but they will find ample supplies of millet, sorghum and cassava in West African markets this year.

Even countries like Niger, Bur-kina Faso and Mali, landlocked in the Sahel of West Africa, yet with economic comparative advantage in the production of coarse grains, meat, groundnuts, cotton and (sometimes) rice, will see the regional market opportunities for these goods change as coastal countries to their south no longer import meat, grains and vegetable oils to the same extent from the world market and instead increase their demand for these goods from their neighbors to the north. In the process, the vast majority in these countries — their rural producers — will benefit.

The lesson from non-CFA West African countries such as Ghana, which have already gone significantly down the path of economic reform, is that a competitive exchange rate and an open economy do not bring hardship to the population. Rather, by decreasing the relative cost of labor and increasing the relative cost of imported goods, devaluation makes both importsubstitution and export activities competitive once again.

This offers the hope that Sub-Saharan Africa can be more than just a source of primary materials for world markets, contributing higher-value manufactured goods to the global economy as well.

A Vital Distinction

Dolls are playthings. They are made of plastic or china. They do not feel pain. They occasionally get stepped on, left out in the rain or lost entirely. Dolls break. They lose a limb here and there, they get worn out, even abused. But dolls, even abused ones, go on being just that - toys that can be discarded or packed away. And they never feel the pain that a human being subjected to abuse would feel.

I am a woman. I am not a doll. And I am perfectly capable of feeling pain. I am writing in response to the insensitive headline "Guys Aren't Supposed to Bash Dolls" that ran over Bob Herbert's opinion column about domestic violence (Opinion, June 30). The headline misses the "big challenge" that Mayor Ru-dolph Giuliani of New York wants to see addressed. Mr. Herbert writes that Mr. Ginliani knows that the culture needs to change "so that it is second nature for men to view the beating of women as 'despicable and cowardly conduct." Until people stop referring to women as dolls, this challenge cannot be met.

launched, and some people take them seriously. "I have begun to stop for red lights," said Tullio Pironti, a book publisher. "I used to feel stupid if I stopped, because nobody else did."

The Italian government, security details of the leaders and Neapolitans themselves will make sure these visitors see no trace of it, but there is a everlastingly seamy side of Naples. When I exclaimed at a white-bearded body in blue jeans lying in the gutter, my driver scarcely braked, explaining, "No, he's not dead; that's Alfonso, who's quite comfortable there. He's a habitué. Alfonso drinks and drinks. I think he drinks to forget."

Oblivion and disorder, thy name is Napoli. Little moves under the broiling sun except hands jammed on horns. Motorbikes weave on sidewalks around pedestrians, pickpockets, con men, preteen apprentice hoods called "scugnizzi." Vendors hawk African gewgaws, Miami Dol-phin hats, smuggled cigarettes and pirated copies of X-rated movies. The streets are also home to a nasty branch of organized crime called the Camorra, and support some of Europe's highest official unemployment and worst civic services. Neapolitans agree that their city is ungovernable and unlivable, but 78 percent tell pollsters they would never leave.

Naples may even seem quite magical from Bill Clinton's vantage point in the Caruso Suite of the Hotel Vesuvio at the heart of a newly coiffed city core. What a difference a year can make! Last summer, the city hit bottom, overwhelmed by corruption and decay. Garbage festered, few traffic lights worked, potholes swallowed roads, the water was brown, the city was not paying its bills.

Change began on Aug. 6, 1993, when Prefect Umberto Improta-Rome's senior representative in Naples, dissolved the feuding, corrupt and inept city government. Mr. Improta, 61, formerly police chief in NAPLES — The question being Milan and Rome, does not take kind-tested here under the volcano is ly to civic malfeasance. In two years, ly to civic malfeasance. In two years. he has dissolved 16 local governorder from the chaos called Naples. administrative paralysis. In Naples, When the leaders of the seven rich he named administrators to run the bankrupt city until fall elections.

Before that, though, then-Prime Minister Carlo Ciampi amazingly asked if Naples could possibly accomodate the G-7 summit meeting.

"I said yes, if certain things were done first," said Mr. Improta. The central and regional governments du-tifully anted up about $35 million for infrastructure preparations.

When the mayoral elections came, Naples turned to the left in protest against corrupt establishment parties. Antonio Bassolino, 47, a long-time apparatchik of the former Italian Communist Party, defeated Alessandra Mussolini, granddaughter of the former dictator.

Together, Mr. Improta and Mr. Bassolino have begun stitching the city back together. Public works contracts are now let on a fixedprice basis in a blind draw of competing companies — a revolution in the Italian context. Repaying of the main bayside road, a civic priority for decades, is finished. The Piazza del Plebiscito and the Via San Carlo have been redone and antiqued to restore them to the way they looked in the early 19th century when Naples, home of a ruling Spanish king, stood with Paris and London in the front rank of European capitals. The Royal Palace, where the G-7 leaders will meet, has had its face lifted. The police are giving traffic tickets; trucks are towing illegally parked cars. Mr. Bassolino has reopened half a dozen parks.

But the philosopher and social commentator Luigi Campagnone, 78, a lifelong Naples resident, is skeptical: "I never go out anymore because I cannot bear to see Naples. It's unlivable. People go into raptures about the music, sky, sun, sea, sand. Lies, all lies. I define Naples as a collective infection. Two weeks after G-7 it will be exactly the same mess as before."

Naples is no stranger to big international gatherings, or the fact that little lasting good usually survives them, said the Neapolitan sociolo-gist Domenico de Masi. The Roman emperor Tiberius held ancient world versions of G-7s on the island of Capri off the Naples coast, he said.

"Greeks, Romans, Renaissance princes, 16th- and 17th-century kings have always met here; it's an excuse for a party." Mr. de Masi said. Los Angeles Times.

Reinvented Circus From Quebec of pure magic that draws almost uniform

By Ann Duncan

ONTREAL — In only 10 years, the Cirque du Soleil has gone from being a ragtag bunch of stilt-walkers, fireeaters and assorted street performers to becoming one of Quebec's chief cultural exports.

The Montreal-based Cirque did this by reinventing the circus from the ground up. For the Cirque is about as far removed from Barnum and Bailey as water from

The Cirque's special brand of magic has transcended national boundaries, charming crowds around the world. Its three current shows - each production with its own theme, flavor, story line and raison d'être - are playing in three different

Until Sept. 11 in Tokyo, the Cirque is performing "Saltimbanco," about a fantastical vision of the future, and Cirque officials recently amounced that they would be taking "Saltimbanco" on the circus's most ambitious European tour ever, starting in March 1995 in Amster-

The Cirque also has a permanent home for its "Mystère" show at the Mirage Resorts hotel in Las Vegas. And it recently unveiled its latest show, "Alegria," before enchanted hometown crowds here. "Alegria" - whose title is Spanish for elation or joyfulness - will then go on a two-year tour of North America with stops in San Francisco, Santa Monica, New York, To-ronto, Chicago, Boston, Washington and Atlanta.

In the company's experience, a Europe-an tour is something of a gamble. In 1990, the Cirque hit London during a rare heat wave. "It was the biggest heat wave in the past 60 years," Jean David, the Cirque's vice president of marketing and communi-cations, said recently. "Everybody left town, including the tourists, and nobody wants to go into a tent when it's 100

Many of the Cirque's seemingly revolu-tionary approaches to costumes, staging, lighting and theatricality have been bor-rowed from or influenced by other key cultural figures in Quebec. These include the internationally known theater director Robert Lepage, the Carbone 14 dance-performance group and the rock star Michel Lemieux, who is considered a wizard with lighting and special effects.

Yes, there is still a big top. This "circus of the sun" usually performs under its trademark blue and yellow, 2,500-seat tent, although the Cirque was asked to use a more muted dark bige for its current run in Tokyo.

But gone are many of the traditional, three-ring entertainments. Instead, the Cirque usually presents a coherent show, complete with a theme and plot development, all presented on one amorphously shaped multilevel stage.

Gone, too, are animals. The Cirque exploits human beings only, transforming them by turn into living pretzels (the con-tortionists), crazed wild beasts (the deathdefying aerial acts and hyper-energenc acrobats), and loony creatures who seem to spring from the deep recesses of a collective unconscious. These can range from almost traditional clowns to New Age Greek choruses.

All these Cirque-styled creatures are in ultra-exotic costumes, with funciful lighting, hypnotic music and mesmerizing choreography. In short, the Cirque is the kind

A retrospective of Clint Eastwood's life and films will be available next year on CD-ROM. The Cirque's talent is as international as the show's customary appeal. In "Alegria," the three clowns are from Russia, two 9-year-old contortionists are from Mongolia, the pole balancers are from China, the comedian is from Belgium, and the tumblers are from the United States.

and Canada. But the corps of the creative team is almost exclusively Quebecois, with Gilles Ste.-Croix, a former fire-cater, as artistic director, Franco Dragone, whose background is the theater, as director; Dominique Lemieux, a fine arts graduate, is the costume designer, and René Dupéré com-

ADICAL reinvention of the circas is the secret, he said, and that stems to a large degree from French-speaking Quebec's unre-lenting quest for identity during the last 30 years or so.

This quest, David said, has prompted a number of Quebec artists to question at some basic level who they are and why. especially what it means to be a French speaker surrounded in North America by a sea of more than 200 million predominantly English speakers. And in so doing, he added, these Quebeckers touched on issues that that affected other people

Trop de Bonheur

Directed by Cédric Kahn. France.

Valérie (Estelle Perron) and Mathilde (Caroline Trousselard), high school students in a small southern village, are best friends, but Valérie is the kind of blonde who gets all the attention from the boys. Kamel (Malek Bechar) and Didier (Didier Borga) are best friends too, but Didier is a French boy and Kamel is an Arab. The story of those who are excluded from the game of love and desire is played out on dusty bikes and during a party. Kahn, who made "Bar des Rails," a fine mournful first feature, developed this fable from a TV film (part of a series on adolescence called "Tous les garçons et les filles de leur age"). His structure looks Rohmerian, with the crisscrossing of couples and the choreographed all-night par-ty. A "Ma nuit chez Claude" for the '90s? Of course, these kids don't articulate or even express much, so what takes place has to be gleaned from trite talk, smooth empty faces and the gap between their words and deeds. Such banality may make the characters seem real, but it's as if they're involved in an exhausting exercise, not always gripping to watch.

Michelle Pfeiffer and Jack Nicholson in "Wolf."

Directed by Mike Nichols.

"Wolf," the new Mike Nichols film starring Jack Nich-olson and Michelle Pfeiffer, doesn't take a straight horror film approach to the werewolf genre, and it's not a jokey send-up either. It's something fresher and infinitely more inventive - a satire about how to climb the corporate ladder that uses werewolf lore only as its metaphorical springboard. In its own delightfully pecu-liar way, the film is the only one of its kind ever made — a horror film about office politics. What Nichols has attempted here - with the assistance of the screenwriters Jim Harrison and Wesley Strick - is the filmmaking equivalent of a high-wire act. The result is a sometimes shaky, always enchanting Beauty and the Beast story for grown-ups that is the very essence of smart fun - droll, sophisticated and surprisingly, pleasingly light. The movie isn't wholly great; it starts to unravel just after the mid-way point. Still, there are charms enough all the way through to make it the most seductive, most enjoyable film of the summer. (Hal Hinson, WP)

The Shadow Directed by Russell Mulcahy. U. S.

"The Shadow" is based on the exceptionally popular radio character, who appeared in 1930 and didn't vanish from the airwaves until 1954. Who knows what evil lnrks in the hearts of men? The Shadow knows, is one of the most famous phrases in American pop culture, familiar even to people who have no idea who the Shadow was or what he did. In this sleek entertaining new movie, the Shadow is Alec Baldwin, a wily actor who brings along just the right mix of do-goo dism and evil potential. Style is almost everything here, and it's a tough call whether the star is handsomer than the sets. One of the big fail-ings of "The Shadow," though, is that neither the Shadow nor the plot are very compelling. But the movie of-fers a diverting, nostalgic re-treat to the innocent days when crime fighting was a pleasant, rich man's hobby. (Caryn James, NYT)

New Wave: Urban Mediterranean

By Molly O'Neill New York Times Service

EW YORK --- A man is squinting at paint chips in hues of deep yellow, gold and orange at a store on Canal Street in lower Manhattan. He wants to turn his loft into a patch of Tuscany. "You know," he says, faded but sunny.

The Mediterranean lifestyle, a loosely defined fantasy of casual, healthful, warm and intimate existence, is comfortable for the stylish and accessible for the striving. Everybody finds it oh, so chic. And it seems to offer solutions to a battery of modern America quandaries. Chic is rare-

In private homes, decor as well as entertaining styles conjure long lazy after-noons in a taverna. Now it often statistics gathered by Informameans oil-cured olives, loaves of peasants item Resources Infoscan, an organization bread, platters of grilled chicken, big that charts grocery sales, bowls of pasta and salads, all served simultaneously.

"People want real food, fresh food, as close to its natural state as possible," said Jean-Michel Savoca, the owner of New York Parties, a caterer. "The French idiom has been eclipsed by the more natural, less fussy Italian one."

Health consciousness is no bit player in the fascination with the Mediterranean region, where the rates of coronary heart disease and some forms of diet-related cancer are lower than in the United States. But the mythic Mediterranean lifestyle is more alluring than yet another physician's recommended eating regime.

Seeing London From the Thames

By William E. Schmidt New York Times Service

ONDON - With two short blasts on the horn, the captain throttled down and slipped the Sarah Kathleen sideways, wrestling the tidal surge of the Thames as he began to bring the boat around.

The cruiser had just glided underneath Tower Bridge, and most of the passengers who paid for the hourlong sightseeing trip aboard the open-decked 60-foot (18-meter) boat were still twisted round in their seats, squinting at the great Gothic-style towers soaring above the river.

"Now would be a good time to get out your cameras," the captain amounced over the loudspeaker as he swung the bow upriver and steered between the bridge's huge stone piers.

Never mind that the boat, and everyone's cameras, were now aimed into the late afternoon sun. Backlighted and framed in shadow, the gray stone towers and latticeworks of iron griders, freshly painted in brilliant white and blue to celebrate the bridge's centenary this year, loomed spectacularly over the river, offering a new and dramatic view of one of London's most familiar landmarks

On balmy summer afternoons, there are few better and more interesting ways to see London than from the deck of a cruise boat gliding along the Thames.

The river, after all, is not only the heart of the ancient capital and, in a way, its main road, it is the reason the city exists; London was founded by the Romans as a river port in A. D. 43.

Simply as a vantage point for seeing London, the river opens up new vistas, affording a kind of wide-angle perspective rarely glimpsed within the capital itself. From the Thames, the great dome of St. Paul's or the buildings of Parliament or the 18th-century splendor of Somerset House, just beyond Waterloo Bridge, loom much larger and more powerful. The river itself is cleaner and more pleasant than it used to be. While health authorities say the river is not safe for swimming, officials of Britain's National River Authorities say they have counted 112 species of fish in the river, as a result of anti-pollution projects started during the 1970s.

On the lower stretches of the river, boats are again harvesting cockles, and Dover sole and even salmon swim freely along its length.

As recently as the mid-19th century, the Thames was little more than a tidal cesspool; more than 400 sewers emptied directly into the river, and the smell was so horrific inside Parliament that sheets soaked in lime chloride were hung in riverside committee rooms in the hope of overpowering the stench.

While the Thames is still very busy, it is not nearly as crowded as it was earlier this century, when freighters and cargo barques used to tie up in long rows beside niverside warehouses.

Many of those warehouses - especially the ones on the south of the river, across from the City — have since been converted into trendy apartments, offices and restaurants, giving the river a new and friendlier public face. In several locations, pubs and restaurants have opened terrace decks overlooking the river.

OST river cruises begin at Westminster Pier, just below the tower of Big Ben. The boats, at the pier across the street from the Westminster Underground station, range from enclosed double-deckers, complete with bar, to smaller boats with open-air decks. Travelers can go either upriver, toward Hampton Court, or downriver, in the direction of Tower Bridge and, farther along, Greenwich and the Thames Flood Barrier, the control structure across the river to capture flood surges.

The simplest way to see the river is to jump on one of the cruise boats that run regularly between Westminster and the dock at the Tower of London. The trip takes 20 to 30 minutes, depending on the tides, and along the way passes beneath During the summer months, the boat pilots usually keep up a chatty travelogue, combining commentary on riverside sites with obviously scripted jokes and social observations ("The hotel you see on the right is one of the most expensive in London, catering to three classes of people: the rich, the very rich and the filthy rich").

At the end of the cruise, don't be surprised if the captain passes a hat, but tips for the guide are voluntary.

The journey carries the traveler past the gentle curve of Victoria Embankment and eopatra's Needle, the pharaonic obelisk brought from Egypt in the 19th century, the modern glass and steel pile of the South Bank Center, London's largest cultural complex; the glorious wedding cake steeple of St. Bride's Church and dome of St. Paul's, and the Belfast, a World War II cruiser moored on the river as a kind of floating museum, across from the Tower.

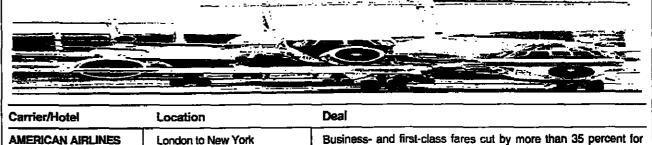

Among other things, approaching the Tower of London from riverside offers the day-tripper the eerie sense of what it must have been like for Anne Boleyn and the Earl of Essex. Condemned to death, they arrived, like all prisoners, by river, entering the fortress through Traitors' Gate, clearly visible only at low tide.

A longer voyage downriver to Greenwich takes about 40 to 50 minutes, and passes, along the way, the zero-degree meridian, separating the hemispheres.

The trip upriver to Hampton Court, the former royal palace, takes about three to four hours. Along the way, the boat slides under the Victorian fantasy of the Chelsea Bridge and traces the course, from Putney Bridge to Mortlake, of the annual spring race between the Oxford and Cambridge crews. Past Kew, the river opens up into lush countryside, passing cottages and gracious homes.

For those who just want to spend some time on the water, there are regular sightseeing boats that run from Westminster and Charing Cross Piers, some of which offer dining — luncheon, tea or dinner. There is an addition to this year's fleet: a four-hour nighttime cruise, with an afterdinner show by an Elvis impersonator.

Keeping Up With Your Mileage

By Roger Collis nternational Herold Tribune

EEPING track of frequent-flier programs, mileage thresholds, partner tie-ins, bonus offers and expiry dates is the most daunting management task for business travelers. Which airline you fly, where you stay, how you pay, which phone card you use, and which rental car you drive are the kind of decisions that you can only propcriv delegate to yourself.

Even a straightforward trip from, say, Tokyo to London can require some fancy footwork. Do you fly nonstop with Japan Air Lines, thus earning the last 6,000 miles you need for a free first-class round-trip ticket? Or SAS via Copenhagen to top up your miles for a free business-class flight to New York? Or Virgin to earn a 30,000-mile bonus for your first flight in business class, which can buy you two round-trips from London to Paris with British Midland? Flying British Airways, plus five nights at the Hilton (charged to Amex), will earn you enough miles to qualify for a Silver Executive Club card, which confers lounge privileges at major airports and a raft of other benefits. And so it goes benefits. And so it goes.

Glasnost it is not. And with airlines shaving services and benefits and availability of awards, changing partners and canceling routes, and accumulated miles expiring faster than stock options (don't. count on a million miles in the bank for a peripatetic pension plan), even the most dedicated mileage junkies are finding it hard to stay ahead of the game.

Since American Airlines introduced AAdvantage as a short-term promotion back in 1982, frequent-flier programs have taken off in a big way. The world's airlines collectively operate about 80 such programs, which, with cross-parmerships, add up to more peruntations than possible moves in a game of chess. Since European and Asian carriers got into the act in the last two years, there are probably more than 100 million members of the programs, many of whom belong to several programs.

This is good news for travelers, who can obtain luggage, cameras or golf clubs as well as upgrades and free tickets. The airlines, however, face a growing problem. Pundits reckon that only 28 percent of accrued mileage has been used, which translates to more than 36 billion unredeemed miles floating around the system. It has been estimated that if all outstanding miles were to be redeemed in the United States on a single day, 570,000 747s would be needed to meet the demand.

Airlines protect themselves against such an apocalyptic eventuality by typically imposing a limit on redemptions and re-serving the right to modify or cancel programs at short notice. Mileage credit expires after two years with Lufthansa's

The Frequent Traveler

Miles & More, Sabena's Frequent Flyer, SAS's EuroBonus, Qantas's Frequent Flyer, Swissair's Qualiflyer and JAL's Mileage Bank; after three years with American AAdvantage, Alaska's Mileage Plan, United's Mileage Plus and Northwest's WorldPerks; after five years with BA's Executive Club.

There's no limit so far with Continental's OnePass, TWA's Frequent Flyer, Finnair Plus, Korean's FTBS and USAir's Frequent Traveler. But expiring miles seems to be where the programs are head-ing. Delta's new Skymiles (effective May 1, 1995) will expire miles three years after your last Delta flight.

If you don't travel much, mileage can expire before you gather enough miles for one free trip; whereas if you travel a lot you may build up more miles than you can use. The answer may be to spend it on upgrades and other perks, such as free rights at hotels and on merchandise.

Since membership is free, it makes sense to join the frequent-flier plan of any airline you fly. Even if you never earn enough credit for a free flight, you may benefit from members-only promotions and special offers on hotels and car rentals. But try to concentrate on one or two programs, especially on frequently traveled routes so as not to dilute your mileage credits. Look for tie-ins with other airlines on which you can earn and redeem mileage credits.

If you fly short trips (around 300 miles) in the United States, Alaska, America West, Delta, Northwest, TWA and USAir let you earn free domestic trips faster than most other carriers. Within Europe you may find the best awards with smaller carriers. Alitalia's Club Ulisse awards one free business-class or two free economy tickets from Britain to any Italian destination for every five paid round-trip business-class trips. With BA Executive Club you would need to make 11 round-trips in business class to earn just one free ticket to italy, british midiated awards you two round-trip tickets from London to Paris for only 12 round-trip flights in business Geography may dictate which program you join. If you live in Minneapolis, you'll probably want to join the Northwest program; USAir if you live in Pittsburgh. Travelers based in London should certainjoin BA Executive Club (partners: Alaska, USAir, Qantas, Cathay, Malaysia and Singapore Airlines). Scandinavians would almost certainly join SAS EuroBonus (partners: Austrian, British Midland, vissair, Virgin). If you're based in Germany you're going to fly a lot on Luft-hansa and so should join its Miles & More program, but you should also join Unit-ed's Mileage Plus, which offers more gen-erous credits when you fly Lufthansa.

EOPLE based in Hong Kong will want to join Cathay's Passages (partners: Malaysia, Singapore Airlines, BA, Swissair and Australian Airlines). Passengers using Schiphol should consider KLM's Flying Dutchman program, which has reciprocity with North-west and Air UK.

Consider too what you want out of a frequent-flier plan. If your goal is to take the family on vacation or send children away to school, you want a program that allows you to transfer credits.

Several airlines give special perks and privileges to travelers who rack up enough miles a year to reach "very frequent flier" status. Typically, you need to have 30,000 miles to reach the first VFF level. The most important benefits are use of an executive lounge, preferred access to up-grades, relaxation of blackout dates and seat limitations on award trips, and priori-

Lift-Off for German Aerospace

BONN -- Germany announced state research subsidies for its troubled aerospace industry on Thursday to help German companies fight what Bonn regards as unfair competition from the United

The move appeared likely to fuel the current trans-Atlantic dispute about state aid in the industry.

Reinhard Goehner, Economics Ministry state secretary, said the research and technology program would have funding of 1.2 billion Deutsche marks ($760 million), financed equally by the government and industry. It would focus on energy-saving pollution reduction and noise reduction in four sectors: large aircraft, engines, helicopters and aircraft equipment.

"The new program is intended to enable us to catch up, through indirect support, in international competition, especially against the United States and Japan, without starting a new subsidy race,"

The government's contribution will be 600 million DM, payable over four years from 1995.

The aid, centering on the development of cleaner and more energy-efficient aircraft velopment budgets of the Pen- the sector, said the new pro-

Daimler Reviews Payout

FRANKFURT - A top executive with Daimler-Benz AG, Germany's largest company, said Thursday that it would revise its dividend policy next year and may start paying larger dividends to attract more foreign investors.

The chief financial officer, Gerhard Liener, said the decision to tie the size of the dividend to earnings could result in bigger payments in good years or none at all in bad years. The company also announced that it had raised 2.56 billion marks ($1.62 billion) from new Daimler-Benz shares.

"You will start seeing our dividends tied more closely to our results," Mr. Liener said. "We must do this in order to meet our strategy of increasing international shareholders." The sale of almost 4.7 million new shares, which ended Tuesday, had met with "extraordinary success," he said. Buying in U.S. markets increased the American stake in Daimler to about 8 percent, he added.

Major shareholders in Daimler-Benz include Deutsche Bank, which owns 24.4 percent, and the Emirate of Kuwait, which holds 14 percent. Both maintained their shares by fully subscribing to their rights in the new issue.

Berlusconi Hails Weak Dollar on Eve of G-7 Talks

By Alan Friedman ational Herald Tribune

NAPLES - The weak dollar is good for the United States and for Italy, and any intervention by central banks to prop it up would be useless. Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi of Italy said Thursday, on the eve of the Group of Seven summit that he is hosting.

Mr. Berlusconi said attempts at coordinated intervention in the foreign exchange markets were "behind us."

The Italian prime minister's candid statement at a news conference came as officials from Group of Seven countries sought to vanquish any expectations of a coordinated dollar support package.

"I am not worried about the weakness of the dollar personally because I see advantages for the U.S. economy," Mr. Berlusconi said. "I don't see any need for major initiatives every time the dollar is weak," he added.

Antonio Martino, Italy's foreign minister, said the dollar's weakness depended "more on traders outside the United States in the market than on events in the United States." He noted that the Italian government found the weak dollar

"good for us" because it lowered the cost of raw material imports that are priced in the U.S. currency.

Mr. Berlusconi also disclosed that "President Bill Clinton has written a letter to me in which he is proposing that international institutions provide $5 billion of economic aid for Ukraine." The International Herald Tribune reported Saturday that President Clinton would be asking his G-7 partners to support the $5 billion aid package, drawing on funds from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

The $5 billion aid proposal was separate from a financial package to support the closure of the Chernobyl nuclear plant and help rebuild Ukraine's energy sector, Mr. Berlusconi said.

As chairman of the G-7 summit, Mr. Berlusconi said he would also propose an Italian initiative to create a special military task force that could be used to intervene in trouble spots around the world.

[The European Commission does not expect any reference to the current weakness of the dollar to be included in the final communiqué of the summit, a

Japan's 2.8% Joblessness: Don't Believe It

TOKYO - In an illustration of Japan's hidden unemployment problems, the de-partment store Ginza Kanematsu has received more than 20,000 requests for interviews for 30 job openings it expects to have next April.

The job-seekers responded to an ad in an employment guide distributed at university campases this week, and most were students expecting to graduate at the be-ginning of next year's hiring season, a Kanematsu official said Thursday.

This is definitely a sign that news of economic recovery has yet to affect the job market, where companies have padded their payrolls for decades," said Kyohei Morita, an economist at Nomura Research

In the past, larger Japanese companies have tacitly guaranteed lifetime employment in exchange for undying company loyalty. But, Mr. Morita said, that tradition has proved too expensive to maintain through the prolonged recession from which Japan is beginning to emerge.

After three years of unprecedented profit declines, Japanese companies are cutting recruitment drastically and forcing many employees in their mid-50s into "voluntary" retirements.

In February, Japan's unemployment rate hit 2.9 percent, its highest level in six years. Since then, it has hovered at 2.8 percent. When the economy was booming in the late 1980s, it stood at 2.5 percent.

These numbers would excite envy in virtually every Western nation.But in Japan, anyone who worked more than one hour in the last week of a given month is considered fully employed for that month. All members of the armed forces also are counted among the employed.

Economists say that if U.S. counting methods were used, Japan's unemployment rate would be as high as 8 percent.

Schneider in From Cold?

BERLIN - Jürgen Schneider, the fugitive property dealer who vanished three months ago and left behind debts of 3.1 billion Deutsche marks ($2 billion), has made contact with German authorities through a Swiss law firm, the German television network ZDF reported Thursday.

It was the first reported official contact with Mr. Schneider since he unleashed a major financial scandal.

The network said it had learned that a Geneva law firm gave prosecutors power of attorney for Mr. Schneider, but it was not known what he intended. His whereabouts have been a mystery since April 4 when he wrote one of his bankers that doctors had advised him to go away.

Insiders Send a Clear Message: 'Buy'

By Floyd Norris

New York Times Service

EW YORK — The dollar is down, and interest rates are up. There is talk of a new bear market. In that atmosphere. who would want to buy stocks? Corporate insiders, that's who. Buying by insiders - officers and directors of companies — is by some measures running at its most intense since early 1991, when the stock market was taking off in the bull market that began with the Gulf War. "Insiders started picking up when the market bottomed," said David Coleman, the editor of Vicker's Weekly Insider Report, a Washington newsletter that tracks insider buying and selling. "In 1987 and 1990, they did the same thing." Last week, Vicker's recorded more purchases than sales among insiders whose stocks are listed on the New York or American stock exchanges, by a margin of five buys for each three sells. For the last eight weeks, the average such figure is almost even: 1.07 sells for every buy.

That may not sound all that bullish, but it is. Insiders have lots of ways to get their hands on stock before they resort to buying it on the open market. Many have shares from before the company went public. Even more get options to buy stock. Such options are often exercised at the same time the stock is sold, leaving the insider with no market risk. As a result, there are almost always more open-market sales of stock by insiders than there are similar purchases.

And while insider selling is often a warn-ing of bad news, insider buying is viewed as an even better indicator of a stock's being worth consideration. After all, as many a corporate officer has explained, there are lots of reasons for an insider to sell besides bearishness. The insider wants to diversify investments, or pay for a new house, or college

A level of buying as high as the current one has often served as an indicator for the entire market.

tuition. But there is no obvious reason to buy, except hope that the price will rise. A level of buying as high as the current one has often served as an indicator for the entire market. Vicker's regards as bullish a ratio under 1.32 sales for each open-market buy.

Insiders are required to report their transactions to the Securities and Exchange Commission by the 10th day of the following month. Thus, all June trades are to be reported by Monday. Many such reports still come in late, but stiffer rules — including a requirement that companies report to shareholders why officers and directors were late in filing — have improved the promptness of filing.

As a result, the ratios now being reported include activity in May as well as June and thus are somewhat behind in terms of actual activity.

Vicker's compares the number of sales by insiders with the number of openmarket purchases, regardless of the size. And while Vicker's reports weekly figures - last week's ratio of 0.61 of a sell to each buy was the second lowest in the last three years - it focuses on an eightweek moving average to smooth out the

"Since October 1974, when we began plotting this data, the market has not failed to improve significantly when our eight-week sell-buy ratio fell below 1.0," Mr. Coleman said. The ratio fell below that figure last month, although it edged back up at the end of the month.

Among individual stocks, Mr. Coleman said he had seen considerable interest in a number of gambling stocks. Casinos were darlings of Wall Street in 1993, and a lot of insiders chose to sell then. But the stocks have been driven down this year, and recently there has been interest shown by insiders in such com-panies as Boyd Gaming, Circus Circus, Casino Magic, Station Casinos, Grand Casinos and Sahara Gaming. Several real estate investment trusts have also seen insider interest, including Storage Equities, Partners Preferred Yield and Crescent Real Estate Equities. And International Business Machines Corp. has seen substantial insider buying at prices from $55 to $58 and a bit higher, Mr. Coleman noted.

IBM Moves to Defend Mainframe Business in EU

By Tom Buerkle

al Herald Tribune BRUSSELS - International Business Machines Corp. said Thursday it would pull out of a consent agreement with European authorities to provide technical information to its competitors, in an apparent bid to stem the decline of its mainframe

The announcement, which came just four weeks after IBM applied for a release from a 1956 U.S. consent decree that has constrained its computer service business, marks an attempt by Big Blue to come to grips with the loss of industry dominance over the past decade.

The company has suffered as networks of personal computers and workstations have eroded its highly profitable main-frame computer business, analysts said. IBM moved to end monopoly proceedings against it in 1984 by agreeing with the European Commission to provide specifications to competitors on product attachments, memory and software for its main-

IBM was allowed to terminate the agreement on one year's notice, which it provided to the commission on Wednesday and announced publicly Thursday.

A commission spokesman said it would be "premature" for the commission to take an immediate position on IBM's decision. Hans Olaf-Henkel, the chairman of IBM Europe, said the industry today is dominated by client-server networks based on open, rather than proprietary, computing systems. "The dynamics of the industry have made most of the undertaking's terms obsolete," he said. Jim Ruderman, an IBM spokesman in Paris, said the company has had only a few requests for information from Hitachi, Amdahl and Fujitsu in the last five years, and none from European companies. He said IBM did not expect any new action by the commission.

A spokesman for the commission, the European Union's executive agency, said officials had noted the announcement and would speak with other computer companies and try to assess over the coming year whether IBM remains too dominant in the mainframe market.

IBM's share of the European mainframe market has stayed steady at around 55 percent but the market itself has dropped to an estimated $6 billion this year from $10.4 billion in 1989, said Martin Hingley International Data Corp. in London. Europe's overall computer market, including PCs and software, has surged to $120 billion, he added.

June marked the first time in more than a year that sales of women's clothing could be described as robust. Department stores and retailers selling clothes in the moderate to higher price range did particularly well. One analyst said department stores, which have struggled to compete with discount and off-price clothing stores, are giving consumers the values they've been demanding. He said department stores reported better clothing sales during June than discounters did. Limited Inc., the largest specialty apparel retailer, continued to struggle, however. The company's performance has been hampered by management problems. Wal-Mart Stores Inc., the nation's American retailer, said sales from stores open at least a year rose 9.3 percent from June 1993, while total sales were up 26 percent.

Separately, the government reported Thursday that the number of Americans filing the first time for unemployment benefits dropped 21,000 last week to the lowest level in nearly four months.

The dollar fell against the Deutsche mark and the yen on Thursday as traders speculated that leaders of the G-7 countries will do little at their summit to bolster the flagging U.S. currency, Bloomberg Business News reported from New York.

Mr. Berlusconi's comments were the latest in a series by G-7 leaders and senior government officials indicating that they were not willing to try to support it by buying dollars in the foreign exchange market. Economics Minister Günter Rexrodt of Germany said Wednesday that efforts to support the dollar were sure to fail.

"The G-7 is sending signals that we shouldn't expect any action from them in the curren-cy market," said David De Rosa, director of foreign exchange trading at Swiss Bank Corp. "Of course, they could be trying to fake us out."

Budapest Shares Bubble Again Roller-Coaster Market May Be Boosted by Economy

By Henry Copeland Special to the Revald Tribune

BUDAPEST — The victory of Hungary's former Communists in elections in May may give pause to some foreign investors considering Budapest equities.

But local stock analysts say not to worry. After all, it was these same politicians who first permitted equity issues at the beginning of 1989. The laissez-faire Communists had already granted considerable autonomy to enterprises, encouraged foreign investment and ended many price controls.

In any case, Budapest's exchange has appeared to decouple itself from politics.
The market snored through two rounds of elections in May that gave the Social-ist Party an unexpected 32-seat majority in Hungary's 386-member Parliament. Now, analysts here say that a rebounding economy, pools of capital dedicated to Eastern Europe and attractive equity prices will attract investors.

The Budapest Stock Exchange opened in June 1990 with the listing of Ibusz, a state-owned travel company that was dominant in its field at the time. The first offering on the post-Communist exchange was Ibusz, and its shares were priced at 4,900 forints, or $48 at current exchange rates. They soared to 12,000 within days.

But Ibusz foundered when it had to contend with vigorous competition, and the stock now trades at 1,320. Investors who joined in a cuphoric first wave of buying have lost as much as 95 percent of their capital.

Other stocks performed only a little better, as the collapse of trade with the former Soviet bloc and a record-breaking stabilized above 1,400, of two-year drought sliced 20 percent off January's high of 2,190.

gross domestic product between 1989 and 1993. Having risen as high as 1,227 in March 1991, the index of the nine equities that make up two-thirds of the Budapest exchange's capitalization reached an alltime low of 667 in May 1993.

The situation improved later in 1993, however. Istvan Racz, an economist for CS First Boston in Budapest, said there was a "tremendous improvement in earnings, both for the broader economy and the stocks traded on the exchange." Just as important to the market's revival, Polish equity prices soared eight-fold in 1993 and the Czech market surged nearly fourfold between September 1993 and February 1994. This helped Budapest prices to nearly double in the second half of 1993 and to double again in January. Volume on the Budapest market rose eightfold from the first to the second half of 1993, and volume in January alone equaled that for all of 1993.

"There is a growing sense that Poland. the Czech Republic and Hungary form a region: Central Europe," said Mr. Racz. This sort of regional treatment means that whenever prices are too high in Poland or the Czech Republic, people are inclined to see what is on sale in Budapest."

The recent routs in Warsaw, where stock prices fell 60 percent, and Prague, where they slid 50 percent, have hurt Budapest prices, but Hungarian shares touched bottom more quickly and have stabilized above 1,400, off a third from soar and dive twice, many Hungarian investors have become wary and prefer one-year government securities, which yield 25 percent, to equities.

Julian Cooke, manager of the $100 million Hungarian Investment Co. for John Govett & Co. in London, said he had been buying Budapest equities at current levels. "The growth of 1 or 2 percent projected for Hungary's economy this year may not be that exciting in itself, but it is symbolic of having turned the corner," he said.

Mr. Cooke listed other positive factors, such as a substantial off-the-books economy that was "quite dynamic." He also said that most companies had restructured themselves enough to compete, that Eastern trade links were reviving and that the German economy, a key market for exports, was rebounding. Oversubscriptions for recent new issues have also buoyed the market, he said.

At the same time, analysis warn that the market has only 31 stocks and a capitalization of little more than $1 billion. making it vulnerable to sudden movements. The surge that nearly doubled the value of the market in January was fueled by volume of only $80 million.

This spring, companies such as CS First Boston and Baring Brothers launched $500 million in new equity funds dedicated to Eastern Europe's markets, and brokers hope to entice some of that money to Budapest. Trading with an average price/earnings ratio of 14, the stocks look especially attractive in comparison with those in Poland, where the ratios are often two to three Trading in government bonds has started to account for Shanghai Stock Exchange, official statistics show.

Treasury bill futures, viewed as an exotic experiment when launched nine months ago, have become China's hottest financial instruments.

The unexpected burst of activity in the bond market is welcome news for both Beijing, which is desperate to cover its mounting budget deficits without printing more money, and

Interest in stocks has been virtually killed by a 75 percent plunge in the share index for domestic investors from its high in February last year, and Shanghai brokerages are in-creasingly turning to bonds to stay afloat.

Bonds are filling the gap as a result of the success of this year's record issue of 100 billion yean of two-year and three-year Treasury bills, which are trad-ing on the Shanghai market.

Kawasaki Steel's Big Bet Can an Underwriter Help It Pay Off?

TOKYO - Kawasaki Steel Corp. has 100 billion yen ($1 billion) riding on whether its stock price will top 441 yen by September.

Thanks to Kawasaki's powerhouse under-writer, Nomura Securities Co., which has issued a glowing research report and bought lots of Kawasaki shares in recent months, the gamble may pay off. The recovering steelmaker's shares have already climbed 33 percent this year, finishing at 411 year on Thursday.

Nomura's efforts are another example of the chibby world of Japanese corporate finance. The 441 yen mark is the key because that is the price at which investors would cash in about 120,000 warrants issued by Kawasaki and attached to bonds that Nomura and Yamaichi Securities Co. helped seli.

Warrants are securities that grant an investor the right to buy new shares at a predeter-mined price. If the market value of the stock rises above the warrant's execution price, investors exercising their warrants can sell their new shares for the higher market price and pocket the difference.

While Kawasaki's brightening prospects might justify some improvement in its share price, Nomura's rivals are startled by the magnitude of the swing. While its stock has risen by almost a third this year, Japan's other unprofitable steel giants have gained less than Kawasaki's rivals say Nomura is wielding its considerable power to bid up the steel-maker's shares to help keep a valuable corporate client out of a financial jam.

"I think it's excessive," Shigeki Okamoto, an analyst at UBS Securities, said of Kawasaki's price. Minoru Udono, a steel analyst at James Capel, said "Kawasaki has no dividend. Why should its price be higher?"

The stakes are high for Kawasaki, whose warrants were attached to about 84.7 billion yen of bonds. Kawasaki hopes to pay off the bonds with the money that investors will pay to exercise the warrants. If they don't exercise the warrants, Kawasaki may have to borrow to pay off the bonds.

At the moment, things are looking up for the steelmaker, whose stock has closed as high as 427.50 yen this year.

There's no denying that Kawasaki's chang-ing fortunes are behind a large part of the rise. The betting is that Kawasaki's cost-cutting efforts will make it the first of Japan's big steelmakers to end its string of losses.

"Kawasaki Steel should lead the recovery to profitability," said Makoto Hiranuma, an analyst at Nomura. But traders and analysts say aggressive salesmanship by Nomura also is pushing Kawasaki's stock higher. "Nomura has been the main force behind the stock. They've been the most positive on it," said Raymond Bressoud, a trader at UBS Securities. As Kawasaki's lead underwriter, Nomura helped the steelmaker sell $350 million of bonds with 70,000 warrants attached in Seprants attached to bonds that Yamaichi Securities underwrote expire in September. Both sets of warrants entitle their holders to buy Kawasaki stock at 441 yen a share.

When they were sold, Kawasaki shares were trading at an average of 445 yen. But by the summer of 1991, the share price had sunk with the Japanese economy, and it has stayed below 440 yen ever since. Consequently, none of the warrants have been exercised.

If all were exercised this year, the warrants would be turned into 226 million new shares, an amount equal to about 7 percent of Kawasaki Steel's outstanding equity. For Kawasa-ki, they would represent roughly 100 billion yen in cash. But if the market price of Kawasaki stock fails to rise to 441 yen before the warrants expire, they will represent nothing. Letting a large client like Kawasaki watch that much money vanish would be bad for Nomura's business, analysts say.

Japan's securities industry is famous for adopting investment strategies designed to preserve client relations.

That sentiment has caused many investors to snap up Kawasaki shares not because they thought the steelmaker was climbing back to profitability but because they thought Nomura would find a way to push the shares up to the warrant price, said Minoru Hasegawa, an analyst at Barclays de Zoete Wedd. Nomura is Japan's largest brokerage concern, and it isn't uncommon for the sheer bulk of its trades to move stock prices, whether it intends to or not, traders say. Japan's securities industry also is famous for adopting investment strategies designed to preserve client relations. Japanese investors also have been known to bid up stocks with warrants that are about to expire worthless. In those cases, the investors are betting that the companies, rather than see potential capital evaporate, will leak news designed to lift their stock price above the warrants' exercise price.

Makiko Yamakawa, a Kawasaki Steel official, attributed the company's stock price rise to anticipation among investors of an improvement in Japan's economy.

Japan's 39-month-long slump has left all its largest steel companies deeply in deficit. Nip-pon Steel Co.'s current loss in 1993 was 18.35 billion yen. NKK Corp. posted a loss of 24.20 billion yen, Sumitomo Metal Industries Ltd. had a 33.02 billion yen loss, and Kobe Steel Ltd. posted a loss of 3.42 billion yen. As for Kawasaki, it posted a loss of 32.28 billion yen, and billion yen, and because the steel steel to the steel steel to the steel steel to the steel to and hard times prompted it to suspend its dividend in September.

Murdoch Could Face Barriers At Fairfax

SYDNEY - Rupert Murdoch's purchase of a small stake in the rival media group John Fairfax Holdings Ltd. has raised eyebrows in investment circles, with analysts detecting a possible raid on Australia's oldest and most lucrative newspaper company.

But Mr. Murdoch's News Corp., which has bought about 2.3 percent of John Fairfax on the open market since June 15, would probably face enormous hurdles in raising its stake beyond 5 percent, analysts said. They noted possible problems in particular with Australian anti-monopoly and foreign ownership regulations.

Mr. Murdoch has always had an eye on Fairfax, and analysts doubt the Australian-born mogul would be content to sit tight with such a small stake.

"Rupert Murdoch very, very rarely has a passive sharehold-ing in anything," said Paul Chadwick, an analyst at Australia's Communications Law Center.

Fairfax shares climbed 10 cents, or 3.7 percent, to 2.80 Australian dollars ($2.06), after News Corp. announced Wednesday that it had bought 12 million shares as a "passive investment" in Fairfax.

Stephen Bradshaw, a spokesman for Fairfax, said that News Corp. currently held at least 14.53 million Fairfax shares, representing a stake of 2.05 per-cent. He added that Mr. Murdoch probably had purchased an additional 1.7 million shares through a separate investment account since June 15, bringing the stake to 2.3 percent.

Some analysts said Mr. Murdoch could try to buy extra shares in Fairfax and spark an ownership struggle between its two biggest shareholders: Conrad Black, the Canadian media baron, and Kerry Packer, Australia's richest man and a local media rival.

Other scenarios include the possibility of an awkward alliance between Mr. Packer, who has 15 percent of Fairfax, and Mr. Murdoch

Orioles Sweep Mariners, Trail Yanks by Half-Game

Brady Anderson has been torrid at the plate lately and the Baltimore Orioles are on a roll, which is no coincidence. Anderson hit a three-run homer and substitute starter Mike Oquist pitched six strong innings Wednesday night as Baltimore, playing at home, completed a three-game sweep of the Seattle Mariners with a 5-4 victory.

"I can't remember too many games when he's hit a homer or something like that and we haven't had success," said the Orioles' manager, Johnny Oates. "He has a knack of finding some way to help us win." Rafael Palmeiro also homered for the Orioles, who have won 10 of 13 to move within one-half game of the first-place New York Yankees in the AL East. It's the closest Baltimore has been to the top spot since May 11.

Anderson is hitting .395 (17for-43) with four homers, 10 RBIs and 10 runs scored in his last 10 games. The Orioles are 7-3 in that span.

His 11th homer, his second in two nights, capped a four-run fourth inning that gave the Ori-oles a 5-1 lead. That doomed Seattle to its fourth straight

Ken Griffey Jr. went 1-for-3 with a sacrifice fly. He has gone 11 games and 44 official at-bats since hitting his 32d homer on June 24. Baltimore got its four runs in Salkeld. Chris Hoiles drew a seats.

Thomas Closes On Stalled Griffey

The Associated Press Ken Griffey Jr. may soon be chasing Frank Thomas as well as Roger Maris.

Griffey didn't homer for the 11th straight game Wednesday night, while Thomas hit his 31st, a two-run shot in the ninth that helped the Chicago White Sox win, 6-2, in Detroit.

Thomas, second in the AL in batting, first in runs scored and second in homers, has hit four homers while Griffey has been at 32 and holding since June 24.

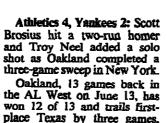

The White Sox were limited to one run and five hits before scoring five times in the ninth off Mike Henneman.

Inheriting a 2-1 lead, Henne-man struck out Darren Jackson to open the ninth, but walked pinch-hitter Warren Newson. Mike LaValliere singled Newson to third, and Ozzie Guillen tied it at 2 with a sacrifice fly.

After Lance Johnson's infield single, Tim Raines hit a ball just over right fielder Junior Felix's glove, scoring pinch runner Norberto Martin and Johnson.

Thomas, who went 2-for-4, followed by lining a 2-2 pitch into the lower deck in left field.

two-out walk, Dwight Smith tri-pled and Salkeld walked Mark McLemore before Anderson hit the fourth on two hits off Roger a 1-1 pitch into the left-field

Angels 10, Red Sox 6: California hit four homers to score 10 runs for the second straight game in Boston. Greg Myers' two-run shot in the seventh made gave the Angels a 6-5 lead, then Rex Hudler hit a three-run homer shot.

Twins 5, Blue Jays 4: Kirby Puckett hit a two-run homer as host Minnesota beat Toronto to end a five-game losing streak.

Indians 13, Rangers 4: Paul Sorrento's three-run homer highlighted a six-run first in Texas and Jack Morris got his 252d major league victory as Cleveland won for the sixth time in seven games.

Morris moved past Bob Gibson into 36th place on the career victory list, allowing three runs and five hits in six innings. Darryl Strawberry in Phoenix: An S.O.S. from the majors.

NL ROUNDUP

swept by the New York Mets in a three-game series in which the losers scored only four runs. Their 4-1 loss Wednesday night gave them a record of 35-50, tied with the San Diego Padres for worst in the American and National Leagues.

Strawberry, who underwent drug rehabilitation treatment in April and signed with the Gi-ants on June 19, has not played a big league game in more than a year. He played three games for Phoenix, going 3-for-10 with two homers.

"He can give us a bona fide threat, which he is," said the Giants' manager, Dusty Baker. "A threat can carry you a long way. He can help the person hitting in front of him.

"The thing I'm concerned about is his baseball shape and endurance," said Baker, noting he may take Strawberry out of games early.

Earlier, team officials said Strawberry wouldn't join the Giants until after the All-Star break. But their situation - 91/2 games behind the Los Angeles Dodgers with the season more than halfway over - apparently ecessitated the move.

The Mets' Bobby Jones pitched shutout ball for 71/3 innings against them Wednesday, Philadelphia.

Strike Date

By Richard Justice

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Major games with the fin, drove in league baseball players, taking a new and cautious approach in imnings with singles to retake their labor confrontation with the major league lead in RBIs as owners, have decided not to set a strike date when they meet next week in Pittsburgh.

As a result, a strike that once appeared likely in early August may be postponed several weeks, perhaps until mid-September, or later.

"They're dying to provoke us into a strike so we look like the bad guys," said a source familiar with the reasoning of the players. "We're not going to let them."

However, the source emphasized that players will walk off the job sometime this season nnless agreement is reached.

The players believe they cannot afford to enter the off season without a new contract because the owners will declare an impasse and unilaterally impose a new system that includes a hard salary cap.

Donald Fehr, executive director of the Major League Klesko drove in two runs with a Players Association, said that since his side did not receive a formal proposal from the owners until June 14, they have not had time to study it.

Sources said the union is still uncertain what the proposed new system would do to salaries and is still asking the owners to supply more information.

Fehr said he believes the owners were intentionally late with the proposal to force a confrontation that would result in a strike. The interim commissioner, Bud Selig of the Milwanker Brewers, reacted angri-ly to this. "Nothing could be further from the truth," he said.

Fehr and Richard Ravitch, chief negotiator for the owners, met Wednesday to discuss a host of noneconomic issues such as expansion, the amateur draft and a possible marketing proposal

"We didn't discuss the underlying gut issue" of a salary cap, Ravitch said. Three members of the Oakland Athletics attended the session and Ravitch said he told them that the overriding objective was a need to know the cost

Fehr said the players will make a proposal next week af-ter the players meet Monday in Pittsburgh, site of the All-Star

"We waited 18 months to get a proposal from them," he said. "We raised questions about the proposal they floated. We want to make sure we understand their proposal and make a thor-

"It's too soon to set a strike date and I don't expect to ask for one in Pittsburgh."

NBA Again Takes Game To Japan

TOKYO - When the Portland Trail Blazers open their season in Japan this fall, it might be with a different Clifford Robinson.

Or at least a different headband. "It's a possibility," the 6-foot-10-inch forward said Thursday when he was asked if he might substitute his Blazer color headbands with ones more likely to attract the Japanese fans.

For example, one Japanese re-porter suggested, something with a bright red rising sun.
"Maybe," came the reply.

Robinson was in Tokyo with offi-cials from the National Basketball Association to announce that the Trail Blazers would open their 1994-95 season with games Nov. 5 and 6 against the Los Angeles Chopers in Yokohama, just south of Tokyo. This will be the third time NBA teams have opened their season in Japan. The Phoenix Sons opened against the Utah Jazz in Tokyo in 1990, and Seattle played Houston in Yokohama in 1992.

The season openers in Japan, the only regular-season games played outside of North America by any American professional sports. league, are no lark.

As in any other regular-season game, the results count toward the playoffs, and Robinson said that when the Biazers come to play, they'll be all business.

"It will be a very hard-fought game," he said. The location of the court doesn't make a lot of difference, he added.
"It's basketball," he said. "It might be in a different country, but it's the same game." Robinson said he had been given a few pointers from Seattle's

Shawn Kemp about what to expect - and all of it was good. "He told me that the fans were really supportive, to expect people to really get into the game, and basically that it was fun," Robin-

For Kemp, of course, opening in Japan was fun. Seattle beat the Rockets in both of their games. Although the NBA games have been a success here—the best seats at the last games sold out in just two hours despite a 25,000 yen ($250) price tag — the NBA does not plan to make them an ammal

"It is very difficult to hold regu-U.S.," said Josh Rosenfeld, the league's public relations director. "We feel lucky to be able to hold them here every two years."

Riders in the Tour de France's fifth stage sailed blithely by HMS Victory, Lord Nelson's flagship when he defeated the French at the epic battle of Trafalgar.

LeMond Cheered, Minali Wins

By Samuel Abt nemational Herald Tribune

PORTSMOUTH, England — They love Greg LeMond in Britain, celebrating him as the first native English-speaker to win the Tour de France, and Thursday morning he won louder cheers from the fans at the riders' introductions than anybody else in the pack. His victory in 1986 remains

But the two Tour stages in southern England have shown just how long ago 1986 is. Even LeMond's Tour victories in 1989 and 1990 seem ancient now as he continues to struggle to regain winning

green, as green as the rolling fields around

Or simply form, any sort of competitive

Wednesday, he lost 5 minutes, 6 seconds when he faded on the final hill climb. Thursday, he lost 2:46 more and found himself in 145th place, 8:53 down, after the fifth of 21 daily stages in this 81st Tour.

While nobody thought he had a chance to win the race, the question now is whether he can make it over the first mountains next week if he cannot make it over small

The 187-kilometer (116-mile) stage Thursday, a circuit from and back into the English Channel port of Portsmouth, should have offered few difficulties for him. It did not for most of the 181 other remaining riders.

In a sprint finish, the winner was Nicola. Minali, an Italian with the Gewiss team. Second, for the third time in this Tour, was Olaf Ludwig, a German with Telekom, and third was Silvio Martinello, an Italian Minali was timed in 4 hours, 10 minutes, 49 seconds, a speedy 44.7 kilometers an hour, on a cool and overcast day. With all the leaders matching the winner's time, Flavio Vanzella, an Italian with GB-MG, remained in the yellow jersey.

Once again English spectators showed up in vast numbers in the villages, small cities and narrow country lanes that the riders traversed. The race has been an enormous success in England, even if the drivers of the many cars bearing team officials, tour officials and journalist do persist in motoring along on the right.

Wherever the Tour is, it is always France - a truism that inspired one of the few criticisms during the two-day visit. The high Tory Daily Telegraph moaned Thursday morning that the Tour "is, true to Gallic tradition, self-obsessed, self-important, self-promoting.

It is also the world's greatest bicycle race and the tens of thousands of who cheered LeMond during the introductions remembered that. Sapped by fatigue, stress and a lost season last year after he broke a hand, the American, who has not won a race since 1992, remains a champion here.

LeMond looked drawn and weary during the applause and more so at the finish. eking help, he met before the stage with his former coach, Paul Koechli, a Swiss who ran the Vie Claire team in 1986, when LeMond first won the Tour.

Koechli, who is a consultant to both riders and Swiss journalists now, is considered to be an expert on training and conditioning. Although he did not reveal what he and LeMond discussed, it was obvious. "My condition now?" LeMond said a

"I'm trying to keep my morale up, I'm trying to keep my motivation. If I can just get through this Tour intact and in health, if I can get a little rest afterward, I could have a very good August with World Cup races and the world championship."

Unbelievably, the three-time winner of the Tour seemed to be saying that he regards it as no more than a preparation race this time.

Not really, he said, "I still want to try to win a stage and have a good Tour. I don't want to give up hope. I've been known to make tremendous improvement in a race."

He thought briefly about that possibility. "It's unlikely I'll make tremendous improvement," he continued, stressing the adjective, "but it's possible. I mean I've worked hard and sooner or later it's got to come around.'

But, added LeMond, who turned 33 in late June, "I go through each week saying it's over for me, it's over for me, it's over for me, it's too hard. And then all of a sudden I feel a little better and I change my mind."

The final question was whether he was riding this Tour de France as his farewell to the race he decided as a teenager he wanted someday to win. "I don't need to say farewell to the sport," he said firmly. "I want to do the Tour for myself. "I have perfect explanations why I haven't been doing well and, regardless of all my problems, I still have a desire to win again. And that's what keeps me going."

Burrell, After Record: 'I Can Run Faster'

The Associated Press LAUSANNE, Switzerland - Leroy

Burrell is the world's fastest human again, and he can only hope he will keep that designation a little longer this time. Burrell re-entered the record books for 100 meters by bursting to a 9.85-second time Wednesday, one hundredth of a second faster than Carl Lewis's three-year-old

The 27-year-old Philadelphian stunned the 13,000 spectators at the opening race at the Athletissima meet with the first world record on the Lausanne track.

Burrell held the world record at 9.90 for 21/2 months before Lewis snatched it in the 1991 Tokyo world championships.

"I came out and said it was a perfect day, perfect conditions," he said. "I reacted well. I knew at about 20 meters I could win. At 60 meters I started pulling away. As I crossed the finish line and saw the time, I said it was incredible."

Burrell wasn't modest about his perfor-"I still feel I can run faster, and my goal is to be ranked No. 1," he said. Burrell finished a yard ahead of David-

Other challenges for the record will come from Lewis, Burrell's Santa Monica teammate and friend, and Linford Christie, the Olympic champion from Britain.

Neither competed Wednesday, apparently because their asking fees were considered too high by meet organizers. But a showdown may come at this summer's Goodwill Games in St. Petersburg.

"Carl is probably just as happy as can be because we're good friends and we can work together," Burrell said. The record race was a brilliant comeback for Burrell, who failed to qualify for the 100-meter U.S. team in last year's World Championships in Stuttgart. "I was impressed, but not surprised because I ran 9.86 in Texas in April, which was wind-aided," he said.

That time, although equal to Lewis' best, iably for the record becaus wind of 2.5 meters per second was above the limit.

Burrell was a member of four worldrecord teams in the 400-meter relay. In 1990, he won 19 of 22 finals and was unbeaten in 1991 until Lewis took the world record. He was one of the medal favorites in the 1992 Barcelona Olympics, but finished a disappointing fifth.

He only competed in Stuttgart when Lewis moved aside to let him compete as anchor in the 400 relay. The American team won gold.

The time was slower than the 1987 World Championship and 1988 Olympic times of 9.83 and 9.79, set by Ben Johnson, of Canada. But his records were canceled after he failed a drug test.

Lewis was training Wednesday at the University of Houston.

"We realize that we can run faster than 9.86. It's just going to take motivation and focus and going out there and doing it. Obviously, Leroy has worked to get to that," he said The 1991 100-meter race in Tokyo was one of the most exciting sprints ever. Bur-rell thought the world championship was his until the end, but a desperate forward lean wasn't enough to beat Lewis.

meters to avenge a loss two months earlier at the U.S. championships. Burrell was timed in 9.88, a time that would have been a record, but Lewis finished ahead of him.

By Alan Truscott THE Reisinger Knockout Team Championship was won in a 59-imp victory by Richard Schwartz of East Elmhurst, Queens, Peter Weichsel of Encinitas, California, Sam Lev of Forest Hills, Queens, and Michael Polowan of Manhattan. In the diagramed deal both teams reached three no-trump. In one room the opening lead was a heart to the nine, and Polowan as South won with the king. He guessed right by leading to the spade ace and continuing spades. When the queen appeared, he took his spade winners and led a club. West played the jack, dummy's ace won, and the diamond jack was led for a losing finesse. West took two diamond tricks and exited with a diamond, but South then played the king and another club. West had to lead hearts at the finish, and South's queen scored the ninth trick.

In the replay, Schwartz saw that his partner's hand must be worthless, so he chose passive defense by leading a spade. The play developed similarly, but this time South led a heart himself to the king and ace. East put up the ten, signalling on-wership of the nine, and West was able to return the jack safely, frustrating any endplay. The Schwartz team gained 10 imps.

Most players recognize that a passive, short-suit lead against three no-trump may be needed with a worthless hand. But as this deal shows, the same may be true when partner has a virmaily worthless hand.

Crime and Punishment: FIFA Edits the Book

PALO ALTO - Those close to the action grow accustomed to the plaintive cry of Bora Milutinovic, the head coach of the U.S. team.

"Hey, arbitro!" bellows Bora. "Arbitro ... Ees criminale!"

Many times, it is hot air. Most officials and most players turn a deaf ear to tions. But the match at Stanford Stadium on Monday was different. L'arbitro from France, the referee Joel Quiniou, spotted a sporting crime and expelled the Brazilian defender, Leonardo.

On Wednesday, FIFA backed its official to the hilt, banishing Leonardo for four matches. It means the Brazilian has played for the last time at this World Cup. And, he was fined $8,000. But tough instice has Hughes (ly needed for some time. Those of us who regard Brazilian soccer as among our best friends were appalled by Leonardo's elbow to the face of the U.S. player Tab Ramos.

It took 42 games, it took Brazil, the champion of the Beautiful Game, to threaten the fair-play essence of this World Cup. And it was done in America, new soccer territory, which had 31 million people tuned in by TV.

Leonardo admitted that, "On the video, it looks deliberate, really bad. But I swear to the very depths of my being, I never intended harm to Tab Ramos."

Only the perpetrator knows his degree of intent. But Leonardo's elbow seemed to be cocked in advance, and used with such force that Ramos was hospitalized with a slight fracture of the skull above his left ear, and internal bleeding.

Referee Ouiniou showed Ramos the yelprovocation toward Leonardo.

Nevertheless, FIFA has used the incident to endorse the message of this World Cup: Thuggery is off the menu; players will be protected.

The ban on Leonardo is tough, but had he done on the street what he did on the pitch, the law would have been tougher. FIFA does not have to prove malice, or give Leonardo the benefit of

His action imperiled another professional's livelihood. The pity is that Leonardo is a fine, athletic, adventurous player. His range of movement, his control of the ball, might well have placed him among the very best left-backs.

Vogts' Risk on 'Gray Wolf' Pays Off for Germany

By Steven Goff ington Post Service CHICAGO — In the days before the World Cup, Germany's coach, Berti Vogts, began to wonder if he had set the right combinations for his defending champions, if he had made wise decisions about his young players and, in one devilish thought, if it made sense to bring back a 34-year-old forward nicknamed "Gray Wolf," whose greatest days seemed well behind him.

Rudi Völler, one of the most beloved German players ever, had announced his retirement from the national team in October 1992. He had a runner-up trophy from the 1986 World Cup and a championship honor from four years ago. His career, he said at the time, would be limited to his professional club, Olympique Marseille, in France

But earlier this year, as he began to put the finishing touches on his 22-man roster, Vogts found a soft spot, a sliver of vulnerability in an otherwise solid lineup. He needed another scorer, a veteran to complement the newest star, Jürgen Klinsmann. Völler, who started his international career when some German players were only dreaming about the World Cup, was the answer.

It wasn't difficult for Vogts, a former national team star himself, to convince Voller to return.
"After one glass of white wine." the coach said with a twinkle in his eye, "things were okay."

And now, as Germany prepares for Sunday's quarterfinal against upset-minded Bulgaria at Giants Stadium, things are better than okay for Völler.

Saturday, in his first start of the tournament, he needed only six minutes to put his team ahead of Belgium in a round-of-16 match. A minute later, he threatened again, stinging a short header that tested the goalkeeper. And later in the first half, after setting up Klinsmann's go-ahead shot, his head-er provided Germany with a two-goal lead.

"I knew I wouldn't be able to play in all seven games." Völler said about the prospects for playing every match if Germa-ny reached the championship game. "But if my turn came, I

That night, Milan was lacking some of its best parts: Van Basten, to injury; French striker Jean-Pierre Papin, who never panned out with Milan-midfielder Granding General,

The Italian trend of performing better with less has been carried into the World Cup, as both of Italy's victories have come shorthanded, including the second-round 2-1 comeback against Nigeria that began in the final two minutes. It seems as though the Italians can excel only when such expectations are removed. Fabio Capello, the Milan coach, agreed that Milan won so freely two months ago partially because it was the underdog for the first time in years. What Sacchi now lacks, however, is the overwhelming midfield presence of Marcel Desailly, the huge Frenchman who corraled his teammates and intimidated Bargelona. No doubt Sacchi hoped that the individual brilliance of Milan's Serbian striker, Dejan Savicevic, would be recreated in Roberto

"Unfortunately only the result counts in the World Cup, and the difference between a good and bad performance is often very thin, decided in a second by a goal."

Spain might be better as well to hire in Barcelona whole - if that means getting Romario, Stoitchkov and Koeman. Without them, the Spaniards have lacked a leader, and Clemente is not the type to apply Cruyff's all-out attack. Only in its 3-0 second-round victory over Switzerland has Spain began to examine its potential. Come Saturday, both sides, like inheritors, will be looking to establish its own identity once and

'Flamboyant Romário Upstages Mild-Mannered Babeto, Off the Field

By Randy Harvey
Los Angeles Times Service

LOS GATOS, California - The, forward is poised in front of a Brazilian flag set to strike a ball that appears as if it will explode through the page of the magazine. The words with the advertisement read: "The mood of a country usually swings with the economy. The mood of Brazil swings with Bebeto's right foot."

But before you rush out in pursuit of the advertiser's product, consider this scene:

In the path leading from the field to the dressing rooms at Stanford Stadium, a stage has been constructed from which players and coaches can deliver words of wisdom to the world's soccer media.

That is what Bebeto is doing, articulate ly explaining the finer points of Brazil's 2-0 victory over Russia in the World Cup's first round, when his partner at forward, Romario, saunters past. Suddenly, Bebeto is alone as dozens of Brazilian reporters turn and follow Romario up the stairs and to the door of the team bus, where he finally bestows on them two sentences before disappearing inside.

Is there any question about who is the man among the boys from Brazil? As Brazilians say, each team needs a singing rooster, and on this team it is Romario Souza de Faria who sings.

. In interviews, which have been few and far between at the team's heavily secured Villa Felice headquarters here, he has admitted that he is an egotist. But as the player most relied on by his teammates to score, he says - almost apologetically

If it is a role, it is one he relishes. He seeks attention with the same intensity as he seeks a seam in the defense - getting married in 1988 to his 17-year-old girlfriend while standing on a local stadium's penalty spot in a ceremony that was tele-vised live, calling living legend Pele senile and "a museum piece" and convening a press conference to announce his refusal to sit in his assigned seat next to Bebeto on the team plane. Besides, he said, he wanted

Although Romano often offers misolicited advice to his coaches about who should and should not be playing, he ac-knowledges that Bebeto belongs alongside him in Brazil's lineup. That does not mean Romário has to like him.

They are unredenting rivals in Spain's first division, where Romano, 28, plays for traditional power FC Barcelona, and Bebeto, 30, for upstart Deportivo de la Coruna.

But the rivalry began more than a decade ago, when they were correctly identified as two of Brazil's rising stars, and, according to team officials, stemmed from a personality clash.

For evidence of that, look no further he must assume those characteristics to be. than their lifestyles in Spain, Bebeto is a devoted family man who brought his housekeeper from Brazil to Spain so that the lives of his wife and children would not be disrupted when he moved there to play. Romário also is married and has two children, but he and his best friend, Barcelona teammate Hristo Stoichkov of Bulgaria, are vigorous participants in the city's midnight-to-dawn nightchub scene.

> Even in recent kidnap incidents in Brazil involving the families of both players, Romário's was more dramatic.

Reputed mobsters tried to kidnap Bebeto's wife and brother, but five others actu-ally did abduct Romário's 62-year-old father, Edevair Souza de Faria. Demanding ransom of $7 million, the abductors held him for six days before they were caught by police. Not only did they not harm him, they provided him with a mattress, cold beer and a television so he could watch his son play a game in Spain.

But although it is convenient for the The ability to score is something else media to paint contrasting pictures of the Bebeto and Romario have in common. two strikers, they are not so different as it appears on the surface. Romário flaunts his impoverished childhood, speaking often of the Rio de Janeiro shantytown where he grew up and the coins he carned by washing car windshields at stop lights. Jose "Bebeto" Roberto Gama de Oliveira does not talk as much about it, but he also grew up poor in the provincial city of Both also are secure enough in their talents to speak out against their coaches. After leading Brazil to the silver medal in the 1988 Summer Olympics, they protested bitterly when Sebastiao Lazaroni used them for a combined total of only 72 minutes during the 1990 World Cup.

Bebeto was so put off by Lazaroni's successor as the national coach, Paulo Roberto Falcao, that he quit until a new coach, Carlos Alberto Parreira, was hired. The injured party then was Romário, whose complaints when left out of the lineup for an exhibition game against Germany were so divisive that Parreira suspended him for nine months. Brought back to the team for the final World Cup qualifying game against Uruguay, Romário scored both goals in a 2-0 victory.

After Bebeto led Spain's first division in 1992-93 with 29 goals, Romário led last season with 30. In the first round of this World Cup, Romário had three of Brazil's six goals and precipitated another when he was fouled in the penalty area. Bebeto had one goal and one assist, but at least one opponent said he thought Babeto was a more valuable player than Romário.

"Bebeto can do more," Samuel Ekeme Ndiba, a defender for Cameroon, said after a 3-0 loss to Brazil. "He can create things with his dribbling and crossing passes. He's more athletic. He is more than just a goal getter."

Bebeto, at 5 feet 10 inches and 145 pounds, is quick, agile and so adept with the ball that Pelé has suggested he should be the play-making midfielder. If he has a weakness, it is that defenders can knock him off the ball—if they can catch him. When they do, he often whines to the referee. Romário stuck him with the nickname chorao, or crybaby.

Romário, by contrast, stands only 5-feet-6-inches, but he weighs 154 pounds and cannot be pushed around. His weakness is that he seldom will go searching for the ball, but when it comes to him he can

"I stand there," he says, "pretending l

up. When Pelé recently said that Romário should let the coach coach, Romano responded by calling Pele "mentally retarded." But Parreira has learned to let Romário be Romário. The forward, who says that practicing is a waste of calories, was excused from the team's final training camp before leaving for the United States because he wanted to play volleyball on the beach with friends.

Asked recently if Romário is a problem, Parreira said, "Yes, he's a big problem for the other team."

Romario has tried hard to become a team player for the World Cup.

"I know I am a difficult guy," he says.
"It's because I'm authentic. I say what I think to your face. But the other players like me because they know that if Romario does well, the team will get results. I've been telling everybody that I'm ready to give my blood for this Cup."

So far, he has fit in well with his teammates, playing drums for their improvisa-tional samba band. As long as he continues scoring, it does not matter if he marches to

A World Cup Quiz: How Did Bulgaria Manage to Survive?

By Alex Yannis

New York Times Service
EAST RUTHERFORD, New Jersey — Bulgaria came to the United States without a victory in 16 games in five previ-ous World Cup appearances. They were the last of the European countries to qualify, and they did that by scoring a goal in the last 10 seconds against France in Paris.

When they were shut out by Nigeria in their first game of this year's finals, it looked as if the Bulgarians would pull their same old fast fade: two more losses in the first round and off they would go into the Balkan

So why is Bulgaria one of the eight countries left in this World Cup when 16 other countries with more impressive soccer credentials have been diminated from the quadrennial tournament?

Bulgaria's surprising success has been enhanced by the clandestine atmosphere surrounding its efforts. They are the most tight-lipped bunch in the tournament. Not only have they closed most of their practices, they have seldom made themselves available to the media. And they have not been exactly forthcoming with tournament organizers either on the release of team information.

No. 3223.

One of the reasons for all the secrecy, according to a source close to the team, is the con-stant in-fighting between the delegation's brass and the coaching staff and players.

Reticence and off-stage bickering notwithstanding, Bulgaria has surged into the final eight with a quarterfinal matchup against defending champion Germany scheduled for Sunday at Giants Stadium.

Just how did Bulgaria do it? The factual answers to the question are easily identifiable: Greece, Argentina and Mexico, the countries Bulgaria defeated in that order. But the deeper inspiration for the victories has come from players like Hristo Stoichkov and Borislav Mihaylov and the team's coach, Dimi-

Stoichkov, 29, a crafty play-maker and scorer who has led Barcelona to four consecutive titles in the Spanish League, has the nerves to go with his scoring prowess. He scored the lone goal in regulation in the secondround victory against Mexico and was designated to be the last player to take a penalty kick for Bulgaria.

But Stoichkov didn't have to deliver on that promise because his teammates built an insurmountable 3-1 lead lead on the penalty kicks.

"I'm very glad we won," Stoichkov said. "It doesn't matter how we won."

Specifically, Blatter asked the teams to "have from now on every day a half-hour media conference with the coach open at least once before the quarterfinal matches. Sweden's regular media information policy was hailed as a "model."

In contrast there was Romania, which plays Sweden in San Francisco on Sunday. It started one press conference by reading out the names of journalists who had offended the Mihaylov, 31, the reliable goalkeeper, embodies the phoenix-like qualities of this mysterious team. In 1986, Mihaylov was suspended from the national team for life by the Communist Party's central committee for his involvement in a violent match between the country's two top teams, Spartak Lefsky and CSKA.

Bulgaria's soccer authorities defied the government and lifted the ban later that year, allowing Mihaylov to play for Bulgaria in the 1986 World Cup in Mexico. Mihaylov did little to justify the federation's belief in him in 1986, with a 2-0 loss to Mexico his biggest setback.

But here, against Mexico, he was marvelous. Appearing in his 74th match for Bulgaria Mihaylov pushed aside two Mexi-

NEW YORK — Written after deep health-care impercent of the covering 90

mersion: The United States faces a grave health-care crisis, though

There are five, or maybe nine or 10, different bills in Congress for dealing or not dealing with the crisis or noncrisis, depending on whether it is a crisis or not.

One of these is the Dole plan, and it is much too confusing to go into here, as are the other four, eight or nine plans, as the case may be, none of which will be enacted anyhow, permitting us to move ahead to the real questions. These are:

• Why do you have to go bankrupt before you can die? • Is it true that Newt Gingrich is wearing President Clinton's old hair? Whither coronary throm-

• Is Ira Magaziner the bril-liant criminal-defense lawyer known as "the great white shark" who was seen being in-terviewed on television the other night about O. J. Simpson's health-insurance policy?

Fortunately for people heavily invested in insurance companies, the insurance industry will continue to thrive, no matter whether a bill of any sort is passed or not. Everybody who counts, from Clintons to Evers to Breaux, fears American medicine will collapse if deprived of the in-surance industry's genius for converting everything from colic to Huntington's chorea into easily collectable profit. Most of the bills being proposed frown on the insurance industry's past practice of canceling their coverage of people who become ill. Senator Phil Gramm of Texas would deal with any such insurance company by sending a note home to its

Of utmost importance is universal coverage, because President Clinton has threatened to veto any bill that does not provide universal coverage.

ter deep health-care imwould be universal, and some say 95 percent. In other words, the universal coverage being discussed is not universal, nor should we expect it to be. Some say covering 90 percent of the population one of these days in some future century would fill the bill. Others say giving everybody the right to company would satisfy the universality requirement. Since this is exactly where we seem to be at present, universality-wise, pessimists worry that Congress lacks the necessary zeal for universal coverage, which might compel Clinton to use his veto or face the classic question asked many years ago by a Minnesota congressman named Blatnik. The Blatnik

"Why you Demos talk so much, do so nothing?"

Shocking though it is, politics also seems to figure in the health-care debate. This is because elections will be held not only this fall, but also in the fall

The curse of elections is that they require politicians to ateach other. This is because the theatrical demands of the 10-second TV commercial for an audience marinated in gunplay and car crashes not only insist on violence, but also rule out sensible discourse.

So, our custom of incessantly holding elections requires a constant supply of government failures for which politicians can blame each other in campaign commercials.
The health-care issue offers so many fascinating ways for politicians of all faiths to bash and flail each other in TV commercials that we will probably have to put up with the racket until something as entertaining avenues for political assault.

Neville Brody: How to Be a Graphics Guru

By Cynthia Rose

ONDON - Blame Britain's cult L of personality on the Beatles. By toppling class barriers, London's Swinging Sixties altered the country's notion of celebrity - linking it forever to the template of pop stardom.

Today, Britain still supplies more than just models, modern dancers and entrepreneurs. It produces Naomi Campbell, Michael Clark, Malcolm McLaren — figures who publicize their talents as if they were rock stars. Neville Brody, 36, is a celebrity in this tradition. But he was certainly Britain's first pop-star typographer. Brody is known around the world, with offices in Germany (at Meta Design) and in Japan (at Digitalogue).

In London, his home base is a striking, glass-walled tower. To find the busy designer here, one must ring, enter and wait — then run the gauntlet of his secretary and minions. The boss, when he finally appears, is clad in black with small gold glasses. His manner may seem abstract, but it masks a well of concentration.

Brody made famous a job that, un-der normal circumstances, would re-main obscure. He has a flair for selfpromotion and an almost infallible sense of which vehicles suit his purpose. "If you have an idea," he likes to say, "you make it happen."

After leaving the London College of Printing in 1979, only a year elapsed before he started his own company. Neville Brody Studios began life in one rented room.

Using clients such as The Face, then a struggling lifestyle magazine, and record companies with names like Fe-tish and Crammed, Brody swiftly built himself a hipster's reputation. He designed for the music industry but also for fashion emporiums; he did covers for rock biographies and also revamped New Socialist. Central to a prolific output was his view of British culture: "Britain's main exports have always been fashion, style and image."

In 1988, three things cemented Brody's status as a graphics guru. His work was hailed in a lavish book, "The Graphic Language of Neville Brody." The book was launched with an exhibition at the Victoria & Albert Museum - one of the institution's largest bows to youth culture. And Neville Brody Studios bought its first comsed by computer games. One entitled Crystal Quest, he says, cured him of "technophobia." (Although Brody had by then designed four magazines

— New Socialist, The Face, Arena
and City Limits — he was still drawing every typeface by hand.) "I approached the Apple Mac," he laughs, "with an attack mentality! I thought computers were just too digital, too

Crystal Quest changed Brody's mind. Now, the Macintosh is his constant companion — and the recipient of many elaborate metaphors. "Peo-ple think of computers as if they were replicate brains. But the Mac is more like a saxophone. You don't learn to use it, you begin to play it. You learn a

After his exhibition, work poured into Brody's studio. He moved several times before settling his staff into the current premises. Yet now he is often absent, working in Paris, Miami or Tokyo. In every city, Brody is photographed, interviewed, videotaped: part of what he likes to call "the diaogue of design." He wants, he says, to really widen the options of his profession. "Graphics, type — they're al-ways an invisible means of manipulation. I try to leave all my work open-ended. So it can be the audience who inputs evaluation. Brody has enlarged that "audience" via some adventurous schemes. In 1990, he opened Fontworks, an electronic boutique that merchandises designer typefaces. Out of Fontworks came Fuse, a package-on-disk of spe-cialist fonts, with five artists posters included in every issue.

Just recently, Brody finished a personal project: "The Graphic Language of Neville Brody 2," his second book. This collection will be published as a house desired. lished as a bound volume, but Neville Brody 2" was originated digitally, and it will also be sold on a CD-ROM. This is the latest format to engage Brodys imagination.

"All the current CD-ROMs," he says, "are only starting points created by technicians. There's no real content in them, let alone design. Interactive products call for a whole new lan-

Such a call is just the thing to get the Brody juices flowing. As he hunches over a very cluttered desk (paper still remains a problem in this Mac-cen-tered environment), Brody's futuristic fervor seems almost contagious. We discuss his work for the Austrian National Broadcasting Service; stamps he designed for the Dutch postal service, even the athletic shoes he publicized throughout Japan. All Brody's evaluations vibrate with optimism. He sees high technology as a means of global bonding.

"People think that digital design is a fixed language," he says. "But it's not; it's very fluid. It's like I'm doing a painting where the paint refuses to dry. I hand it on to someone else, who pushes that paint around. And the process is continuous - it will never stop." This is a signal, he says, of imminent revolution. "And it's going to be bigger than what happened with Gutenberg. Levels of communication are ready to explode."

Will that explosion project Brody's fame further? One design critic who says it may is Lewis Blackwell, the editor of the British-based trade journal Creative Review.

Says Blackwell, "Neville is indeed like a pop star; he was elevated very high, very quickly. He could never be just an ordinary designer again. His work will always be compared to what's expected of 'Brody.' But it's a challenge he's more than willing to

Paris Court Cuts Award To Owner of a van Gogh

Jacques Walter, the owner since 1955 of Vincent van Gogh's "Garden at Auvers," is to get 145 million francs ($26.5 million) to compensate for a ban on the export of the painting, but a French appeals court gave him a lot less than he wanted. In 1982 the government banned the export and in 1989 declared the work part of France's heritage. Walter val-ued the painting in 1989 at 200 million francs, and sued for 250 million in 1990. Last March a lower court awarded him this sum plus interest, 422 million francs in all. The appeal court agreed that Walter had suffered "direct and certain prejudice" but reduced the compensation.

Ted Williams, laid low by a stroke on Feb. 19, has begun walking with a cane and is even dreaming about batting again.
Williams, 75, the last man to hit more than .400 in the major leagues, told the Boston Globe
he dreamed he was batting against Randy Johnson of the Scattle Mariners, and after letting a couple of balls go by he picked one and "just punched it through the middle." The Boston Red Sox can only wish it

George Mickael said in an interview with David Frost Thursday that he would pursue his legal battle to leave his record company, Sony, despite a court ruling against him. He said he would never record with the company again, unless it "unconditionally" released him, which he said was unlikely.

Whitney Houston is expect-ing her second child, and she spilled the news during a concert at the Omni arena in Atlanta. She brought her singer-hus-band, Bobby Brown, on stage and sang him a verse of her hit "You Give Good Love."
